Devaluation Of Franc Set Tonight in Spite of Veto

World Fund Threat Won't Deter France From Pegging Rate At 220 to Dollar

Paris, Jan. 24 (AP).—Finance Minister Rene Mayer announced tonight that France would devalue the franc tomorrow night regardless of any veto by the International Monetary Fund in Washington.

He said at a news conference that final details of the devaluation would be disclosed in a communique tomorrow, and would be submitted to Parliament for approval Monday.

He said France regretted opposition to the move had arisen in Britain and the Monetary Fund's board of directors, but that she was forced to go ahead.

"We were perfectly willing to discuss and negotiate but we finally had to set a time limit," he declared.

He denied France would be automatically excluded from the organization if she overrode a veto, saying, "The statutes of the Fund are very supple on that point."

Sir Stafford Cripps, British Chancellor of the Exchequer, returned to London tonight after 24 hours of fruitless efforts to dissuade the French from establishing a free money market in Paris with a devalued franc for export trade. Cripps argued the French move threatened the financial stability of much of western Europe.

(Fund officials in Washington said it was uncertain that a decision would be announced there within a matter of hours, as predicted by a Paris spokesman. Some diplomats in Washington said they believed French announcements of intention to proceed regardless of the Fund's stand were part of a pressure campaign.)

The French proposed to let the franc seek its own level at home. This was about 340 francs to the dollar. For uses abroad, however, it would be devalued to about 220 to the dollar, instead of the present

Soviet Press Takes Issue With Bevin

Briton's Proposal On Western Europe Held 'Smokescreen'

Moscow, Jan. 24 (AP).—Tass, official Soviet news agency, said today British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin's proposal to strengthen western Europe was a "smokescreen" for formation of a western bloc.

It appeared likely the Bevin speech in Parliament Thursday would generate as much resentment here as Winston Churchill's Fulton, Mo., speech in March, 1946, the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan.

Declaring "a western bloc is born," Tass said "it really and truly is the case of the formation of a system of alliances, at once political, economic and military."

The news agency said further that "one does not need to be very clever to see the ghost of an eastern bloc in the mutual defense treaties" which it said Britain wishes to conclude with Iraq, Trans-Jordan and other Arab countries.

Declaring "the British and Americans want to bind the Arab states in a steel chain of treaties," Tass said Washington and London had now developed a joint military and political plan and were trying to arrange for the use of a whole system of bases for their armed forces in the Middle East.

Diplomat circles said Bevin's speech probably would have no effect on the series of trade agreements Russia has reached with Belgium, The Netherlands, Luxembourg and other western countries, however.

These quarters felt Russia wants and needs the products she is to receive under these pacts, and that the western countries need Russian wheat, timber and other produce.

New Agency On Recovery Recommended

Vandenberg Presents Brookings Report on Independent Unit

By Marshall Andrews

Post Reporter

Chairman Vandenberg (R., Mich.), of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee made public yesterday a recommendation for estbalishing a new agency divorced from the State Department and with an administration of Cabinet rank to handle the European Recovery Program.

Prepared by the Brookings Institution at Vandenberg's request, the proposal was handed to the Foreign Relations Committee by its chairman with the suggestion it be given careful study as a "highly important service." Vandenberg did not indicate whether he was ready to accept the Brookings proposal in full or in part.

In a summary of its provisions, Vandenberg said the study proposed that the administration have full control of ERP both here and abroad, subject only to regulation by the President. The Secretary of State would be empowered to ask for information and to question decisions, but the President would be the arbiter in all disputes.

Support of an ERP management independent on the State Department was indorsed yesterday by Senator George (D., Ga.), a veteran member of the Foreign Relations Committee. He said contributions and expenditures in the effort to insure recovery of Europe "must rest on the solid judgment of an experienced administrator or board."

Inside Track Denied

Edwin W. Pauley and Harold E. Stassen verbally "slugged it out" yesterday before a capacity crowd at the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee investigation of speculation in food commodities.

It was Pauley's day on the witness stand. Stassen had had his inning Friday, for 12 long hours.

In his opening statement Pauley ten times declared Stassen had told untruths about him and repeated the charge innumerable times later.

Untruths Charged

In response, Stassen accused Pauley of not telling the truth about his market operations. He repeated the same charge seven times in a series of questions he presented to Pauley, and then ended the day with a dramatic attack on Pauley's explanation of recent dealings in lard and cottonseed oil.

Although an overflow crowd of spectators was attracted to the meeting, only three members of the seven-man committee showed up. They were Chairman Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.), Senator Theodore F. Green (D., R. I.) and Senator Henry C. Dworshak (R., Idaho).

Twice Stassen, copying Pauley's tactics of Friday, leaped to his feet demanding to be heard—first at the close of the morning session, and next at the close of the afternoon session. However, Ferguson, who Friday refused to let Pauley speak, invited Stassen to go on with his remarks, and at the end permitted Stassen to attack Pauley's day-long testimony.

Lard Dealings Cited

In his closing remarks Stassen charged that Pauley and a group of friends and relatives, had made a huge profit in cottonseed oil in July because of knowledge of Government buying of lard that was not known to the public.

Of 10 speculators in lard at that time, Stassen said, five were of the Pauley group. These he listed as Pauley, Ralph K. Davies, former Deputy Administrator for Petroleum, Mrs. Marie McHenry, Pauley's mother-in-law, Mrs. Harriet Schuster of Ridgewood, N. J., and Schuster Brothers, farmers, of Gower, Mo. Pauley's broker, a partner in Lehman Brothers, New York City, was identified as Frederick Schuster, husband of Mrs. Harriet Schuster, and a member of the Schuster brothers partnership.

Stassen also intimated that two others of the 10 were among Pauley's friends. These were Orville Harden, identified by Stassen as a New York oil man, and Mrs. Alice G. Haslin, the wife of R. G. Haslin, another New York oil man. Pauley denied knowing any of them.

Earlier Ferguson had stressed Pauley's interest in oil companies in California, and brought out that Pauley had recommended Davies, also a California oilman, for the Government post, which Davies resigned in December, 1946.

Pauley opened the meeting by

Blizzard Paralyzes Traffic; 4500 Cars Reported Stalled; City Digs Out From Snow

Strange Sight on a Familiar Hill

Harris & Ewing

"CLEAR THE TRAIL!"—Some strange shouts have been heard on Capitol Hill, but none, perhaps, more strange than "track!"—the skier's cry for clearing the trail. J. Waring Stinchcomb, who got out his skis to take advantage of yesterday's heavy snowfall, gets set for the run. How about a "slalom," Mr. Stinchcomb?

Emergency State Declared by Police; Partial Clearing Expected Today

A snowstorm of blizzard proportions struck Washington yesterday, slowing traffic to a sidelurching crawl and stall, and sending residents into weekend hibernation.

Before nightfall, it was estimated 4500 vehicles had stalled on city streets, with additional hundreds abandoned in the outlying areas. Tow trucks were responding only to calls from doctors, nurses, public utilities and those drivers whose cars blocked other traffic.

By midafternoon, Police Chief Robert J. Barrett declared a state of "traffic emergency," even before the fall had reached a depth of 5 inches. He advised only essential travel, particularly downtown.

Trolleys, Buses Running

Streetcars and buses were reported servicing virtually all routes but slowly and without schedule.

"We're keeping everything moving, but that's all we can say," said a spokesman for Capital Transit Co.

The storm, general along the Atlantic seaboard, brought all the elements of a blizzard to the Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland area. Winds ranged here above 30 miles an hour, temperatures clung to the low 'teens, and the snowfall was 5.1 inches at 9:20 p. m. A maximum of 8 inches and the snowstorm's end early today was forecast.

The forecast for today called for mostly cloudy this morning, partial clearing in the afternoon, and a temperature in the mid-20s.

Traffic accidents were numerous but minor. Many falls were reported. Six persons in the District were treated for their hurts at hospitals and one was admitted in serious condition. In Takoma Park, Md., an 8-year-old girl was hospitalized with head injuries when her sled struck a concrete abutment.

AAA Gives Estimate

Estimate of the number of motorists stalled here was supplied by local headquarters of the American Automobile Association. The association's more than 100 service garagemen handle approximately 20 per cent of the District's emergency calls, it estimated.

The AAA, through teletype conference with its other offices throughout the Nation, found driving conditions "extremely hazardous" in most parts of Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia. Motorists were advised to garage their cars unless driving was absolutely necessary.

The storm, the Weather Bureau here said, came up out of the Gulf of Mexico, across northern Florida and up the coast. By yesterday it lashed the eastern seaboard from Cape Hatteras to Massachusetts, with storm warnings posted for shipping.

It grounded aircraft from Boston to Washington. National Airport here reported its last incoming plane just before 8 a. m. yes-

Draft-Eisenhower organizations were regretfully disbanding yesterday after Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's declaration he could not accept nomination for the Presidency.

Leaders of the National Draft Eisenhower League announced at New York they had asked all State organizations to close up shop. The original six organizers of the league said they would support the candidacy of Harold E. Stassen.

William H. Burnham, the league's general chairman of membership and State organizations, issued their statement. He said he expected Stassen in New York for a conference today and announced a trip he had planned to make on behalf of Eisenhower now would be made for Stassen.

Public Told To Curtail Use of Oil

By Sam Zagoria

Post Reporter

The District Fuel Oil Coordinating Committee yesterday called on oil users to reduce consumption immediately by 15 per cent to prevent a supply crisis.

The three-man group, headed by J. Thomas Kennedy, District superintendent of weights, measures and markets, yesterday received 40 requests for emergency supplies of kerosene and oil. After investigation they issued certificates authorizing small deliveries to 14 homes.

"Stretch" Policy Asked

The number included three in the District, five in nearby Maryland and six in Virginia. The Virginia territory was added to the committee's responsibility yesterday by the Virginia State Fuel coordinator. It included Alexandria, and the counties of Fairfax and Arlington. Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties in Maryland were already under the committee.

The public has been asked to "stretch" the oil they have, making each 100 gallons of oil do the work of 115. This can be done in several ways:

1. Set the thermostat at 65 degrees and leave it there, day and night. (In most homes this will

Plane Headed Here Lost With Five Aboard

By Charles Yarbrough

Post Reporter

A twin-engine plane sometimes assigned to Treasury Secretary Snyder was believed down somewhere in snow-swept Virginia or Maryland last night.

The Secretary was not aboard, but at least five persons were in the Lockheed Lodestar.

The craft took off from Newark, N. J., for Washington at 6:37 a. m. yesterday, refused an instrument landing at National Airport 21 minutes later and started for Baltimore, where weather conditions were reported better.

It had six hours' gasoline supply aboard, enough to last until noon.

Throughout the morning it groped through swirling snow; was reported on the Patuxent River Air Test Center's radar about noon, but no radio contact was made.

The Trans-World Airlines radar at New Castle, Del., picked up another trace of a plane over Lansdowne, Pa., about 1 p. m., but whether it was the missing craft was not determined.

The snowstorm was at its worst about 7:51 a. m., when the plane appeared in the National Airport area. Visibility was cut to three eighths o fa mile and the ceiling was down to 400 feet.

National's tower said the pilot

Instruments Show Major 'Quake in Southwest Pacific

San Francisco, Jan. 24 (UP).—A major earthquake somewhere in the Southwest Pacific, described by one seismological station as the biggest since the disastrous Japanese quake of December, 1946, was recorded today on seismographs in the United States and Hawaii.

Recording instruments showed a temblor lasting approximately an hour and a half starting shortly after 1 p. m. (EST). The direction finders indicated it occurred somewhere in the area of the Sulu Sea, west of the Philippines, or in the New Hebridges Islands.

[The Associated Press quoted a seismographer at West Bromwich, England, as calling the earthquake "an enormous one."—Editor's note.]

Reports from Mexico City said buildings there were swayed by earth tremors at 6:08 EST today. The 30-second quake was not strong enough to cause casualties or damage, it was said.

American Shot In U. S. Sector of Berlin by Red

Berlin, Jan. 24 (UP).—An American lieutenant was shot in the shoulder by a Russian soldier in the American sector of Berlin early today, U. S. Air Force officials said tonight.

Officials identified the wounded man as 1st Lieut. Fred Scheunemann of Chicago, Ill. His condition was described as "not serious."

They said that Scheunemann was shot in the Kreuzberg district when he heard suspicious sounds and turned his flashlight in their direction.

The lieutenant switched off his flashlight when he heard the click of a rifle bolt, the officials said. Then the Russian fired three shots, the third of which wounded Scheunemann.

The Russian soldier was arrested by United States authorities, who are investigating the incident.

4965 More Hospital Beds Needed Here, Ruhland Says

By James E. Ficken

Post Reporter

A total of 4965 additional hospital beds and five new health centers are needed in the District, Health Officer George C. Ruhland revealed yesterday.

His conclusions were drawn from a 37-page report of a six-month survey released yesterday by the Health Department's Hospital Survey Committee.

Most urgent need, the committee said, is beds for convalescent and chronic patients because present facilities fill only 10.4 per cent of requirements.

More health centers are next in importance, said the report. The city has only one modern health center in Southwest Washington. Five more are needed: in the Northwest, Anacostia, Northeast, Deanwood and Georgetown areas.

Additional beds also should be obtained for general hospital, mental and tuberculosis patients, the committee declared.

This priority lineup was presented as the first requirement for the District's participation in the Federal Government's five-year hospital survey and construction program.

Under the National Hospital Construction Act of 1946, Congress authorized 75 million dollars an-

During Thomas Illness

Inspector Truscott Appointed Acting Assistant Police Chief

Bryant Truscott Murray Thomas

Inspector Floyd A. Truscott, chief of detectives, yesterday was appointed acting executive officer and assistant superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department.

The acting appointment was necessitated, according to Major Robert J. Barrett, superintendant, by the prolonged illness of Inspector Walter H. Thomas, the regular executive officer.

Succeeding Inspector Truscott as chief of detectives while he is acting for Inspector Thomas will be Acting Captain Robert S. Bryant. Assisting him will be Lieut. Robert V. Murray, head of the Robbery Squad.

Inspector Truscott's boost led to speculation at Police Headquarters that he might succeed Inspector Thomas should the latter retire. However, Inspector Thomas' wife declared, "He has no intention of retiring."

She declined to state the nature of his illness, saying that the tests he has been undergoing at the police clinic were incomplete. He went on sick leave December 8.

"He is feeling a little better but he is still a sick man," she said.

In making his announcement of the administrative shift, Major Barrett said Inspector Truscott would retain his duties as head of the new Communications and Records Bureau.

Major Barrett said:

"If I had to take a few days off, there would be no one familiar with my work who could temporarily assume responsibility the way matters stand. At present, I have been doing Thomas' work and it is a heavy burden."

The appointments have been approved by the District Commissioners, Major Barrett said.

High Underwear Costs Here Get Close to Senator Langer

By Sam Stavisky

Post Reporter

Big, burly Senator Bill Langer yesterday (figuratively) hoisted his underwear aloft as a vivid symbol of Washington's high cost of living.

Why was he paying $2.59 for a union suit here, demanded the North Dakota Republican, when he used to buy the one-piece undies for 49 cents at home?

The blunt-speaking Senator left no doubt that he considered the Capital's underwear overpriced, and symptomatic of the Federal worker's struggle against H-C-L.

Whoever or whatever is behind H-C-L, Langer declared, is "taking the blood out of the Federal employes, who are living on starvation wages."

The impromptu address on the state of the Union suit was delivered in person by Senator Langer in his capacity as chairman of a Senate subcommittee pondering the possibilities of propping the pay of postmen in particular, and Government breadwinners in general.

Just why, of all the cities in the land, should Washington lead all the rest when it comes to paying for what it takes to live? Langer wanted to know.

"Is it monopoly? Price-fixing?

Billion's Worth

Army to Sell 'Surplus' To Germans

Frankfurt, Germany, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—The United States Army announced today that it will sell $1,000,000,000 worth of its surplus—clothes, cloth, hardware, kitchen utensils, machinery, tents and communications equipment — in the combined American-British zones of Germany.

The surplus, to be channeled into German retail markets, is expected to increase faith in the mark as well as remove some of the material cause for the mass strikes plaguing the Bizonal area.

Food Not Included

While the surplus does not include food, Gen. Lucius D. Clay announced in Washington yesterday that he would ask Congress to appropriate $700,000,000 to buy food for the Germans during the next fiscal year.

The office of the United States Foreign Liquidation Commission and the Bizonal Economic Council for Germany signed an agreement here yesterday under which 847,000 tons of Army surplus will be sold to the German Bizonal Administration a week from today. It will not include such items as ammunition, aircraft and lend-lease property.

Exports to Pay for It

Future German exports will pay for it.

To the average German, the agreement means he may be able to shed his worn shoes and threadbare overcoat for a new pair of boots and a dyed GI overcoat sooner than he might have expected.

His faith in the mark also will be raised. Because he can buy articles at a reasonable price that would cost him 10 times as much in the black market.

Refusal to Allow Check of German Papers Blamed

By Marguerite Higgins

Bad Oeyenhausen, Germany, Jan. 24 (NYHT).—The regular British military train was held up for more than 12 hours in the Soviet occupation zone last night after the British refused to accede to Soviet demands that the papers of German passengers in two sealed coaches be examined.

After strong and high level British protests in Berlin proved unsuccessful, the British passengers on the train this afternoon proceeded to the British occupation zone, and tonight the two German coaches were ordered back to Berlin.

At the last minute 24 British soldiers and officers, left behind to guard the German coaches, yielded to Soviet insistence that the German travel papers be produced. The British turned over the papers under protest.

The British maintain that a four-power agreement provides that those Germans transported out of Berlin on official British or American military trains should be immune from search.

Several British generals, whose indignation did not interfere with their passion for anonymity, were among the rescued group and gave eyewitness accounts of the incident.

One senior British officer said, "when we stopped as usual at 2 a. m. at the Marienborn station, a Red Army officer asked for the British sergeant-major in charge of the train. The Russian insisted that the sealed coaches carried German passengers employed or sponsored by the British occupation authorities and should be opened and the passengers checked. The Russians seemed to want to remove some of the Germans from the train—I have no idea who."

When the British refused to give in, the Russian officer in charge ordered that both the British and German coaches be shunted onto a siding.

The passengers were put under guard but otherwise undisturbed. At 2 p. m. today the British day train arrived and the hungry and weary British passengers were transferred to it.

Devaluation Of Franc Set

ent 120. The move would permit exporters to put dollar price tags on their goods about 50 per cent below the present prices.

The Fund's member states agreed when the organization was founded that they would not devalue their currency by more than 10 per cent without the Fund's permission.

Sources close to the Finance Ministry said Cripps had argued the French move would almost automatically force Britain to devalue the pound and probably force other countries with pegged currencies to take similar action.

French government sources said the creation of a free-money market in Paris would be a long step toward lifting restrictions of the planned-economy type, and in that sense would be in line with American economic ideas.

Might Spoil British Planning

These sources said the reason behind the British Labor Government's opposition was that if the British were forced to follow the French example it would be a step in ending the Labor Government's directed economy also.

These Frenchmen contended the contemplated action would be a step toward world monetary stabilization, a purpose of the International Monetary Fund. They argued that Britain's pound, the franc and some other European moneys were all highly overvalued.

Under the French proposal exporters who turned over their dollar proceeds to the government exchange office would receive half their funds in francs at the revaluated rate of 220 to the dollar and half at the Paris free market rate.

Gives Control Over Imports

Importers of supplies considered essential by the government would obtain their dollars for purchases abroad at the devaluated rate. Importers of goods considered nonessential would have to pay more dearly in the free market for their dollars. Consequently the plan offers the government some control over the type of imports brought in.

The system would increase to the Frenchman the cost of imported merchandise. These higher costs also might eventually be reflected in higher costs in the export industries, but the Government hope to hold imports to the barest essentials long enough to permit the export to get back on its feet.

The free-market franc at home is part of the government's plan for stabilizing domestic prices, a condition that was promised when widespread strikes for cost of living bonuses and wage increases were ended last month.

The franc was established by Napoleon in 1802 and maintained a fairly stable value for 112 years, or until the First World War.

New Agency of Recovery Recommended in Report

asked for a recovery administrator subject to State Department supervision and control on the ground that ERP was an instrument of foreign policy. Vandenberg and Chairman Taft (R., Ohio) of the GOP Policy Committee have agreed that the administering agency should be independent.

The committee yesterday heard Paul A. Porter, former OPA administrator, warn that wage and price controls and rationing in this country would be a necessary part of the ERP. He added that the price was worth paying because without the Marshall Plan "we forsake the free people of Europe and renounce Europe to Soviet communism or to the throes of civil war."

Herbert H. Lehman, former Governor of New York and one-time director of the UNRRA program, gave "wholehearted support" to ERP. He testified for the American Jewish committee. He noted that the recovery plan "is bitterly opposed by the Soviet bloc which hopes to exploit European unrest for its own ends."

Deny Charges of Hart

Vandenberg and members of the committee, meanwhile, denied charges by Merwin K. Hart, president of the National Economic Council, that the Marshall Plan would "socialize" Europe. Hart also had said the United States had yielded to Russia and had turned the United Nations into a "visionary, impractical scheme."

Senate Democratic Leader Barkley of Kentucky joined Vandenberg in repudiating Hart's assertions while he was testifying as a witness before the committee. Senator H. A. Smith (R., N. J.) told Hart his statements were "unrealistic."

U.S. Pays France $607,331 To Cover Coal Sold Her

The United States yesterday paid France $607,331.65 to cover the cost of 54,372 long tons of coal which France bought from the United States.

The unusual transaction marked the first payment of funds to France under the European interim aid bill passed by Congress on December 17.

The State Department, announcing the payment, said that what happened was this:

France had ordered the coal, amounting to five shiploads, prior to December 17. But the coal was delivered in France after the date of enactment of the relief program, and therefore could be legitimately paid for out of the relief funds as one means of easing France's severe dollar shortage.

Technically, the check which was handed to an assistant financial counsellor of the French Embassy at the State Department yesterday, reimbursed the French government for the payment it had made for the coal.

A 24-hour general strike, called by Communist-led unions in Florence city and 49 provincial towns, ended today. The Communist-controlled unions claimed "complete victory" in the strike called to protest alleged police brutality in breaking up a demonstration Thursday.

Strike Called "Useless"

The Communists claimed a "victory" because those arrested during the demonstration were released. The government said the strike was "political and useless," because the men were released pending trial, "a normal democratic procedure."

Dunn said in his speech that the leftist press campaign was a "concerted political attack against the American Government's program of aid for Italy.

"A great effort is being made to delude Italians into believing that shipments of grain to meet the bread ration and coal to provide employment represent 'American imperialism,'" he said.

"Propagandists who oppose the acceptance of grain and coal from the United States do not mention one of the major points of the agreements between our two countries—the proviso that supplies must be distributed to all the people of Italy without discrimination.

Asked Only Effort

"Nor does this propaganda mention that the American Government asked nothing of the Italian people or their government in return except that Italians give their best efforts to achieve their own economic recovery and take part in the general European recovery toward lasting peace.

"Moreover, when, with crude brazenness, the word 'independence' is invoked by these propagandists, no mention is made of American history in that regard. American dead in the war for our own independence speak for us, as do Americans who died in two great World Wars, who fought for liberty and independence against domination."

Communist newspapers throughout Italy today carried a front page article saying that American coal sent to Italy was so bad that Italy had protested to Washington "to make certain that the quality of the shipments corresponds to contracted guarantees."

15 Held in Prague On Spy Charges

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Jan. 2 (U.P.).—An official communique today announced the arrest of 15 persons, including civilians, military personnel and several women, on charges of spying for "a certain Western power."

The communique said the alleged spies were mostly Sudeten Germans who maintained contact with deported relatives and friends in Germany.

Sudeten Germans were attracted into the organization by "false promises of service in a foreign army" in which "their well-known hatred of Czechoslovakia would be utilized," it said.

Stalin Fan Slain

Baghdad, Iraq, Jan. 24 (AP).—A man who shouted "Long live Stalin!" was beaten to death today by an angry crowd during demonstrations against the British-Iraq treaty. Police rounded up 20 Communists charged with leading small demonstrations since yesterday.

UMT Foes Court Ruin, Roberts Says

Outmoding of Big Armies by Modern Warfare Is Denied

By The Associated Press

Secretary of Defense Forrestal and former Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts fired counterblasts yesterday at those who contend "push-button warfare" makes large armies obsolete and universal military training unnecessary.

"If we accept the premise that, under existing world conditions, America must remain strong in order to assure world peace, no alternative exists to universal training," asserted Forrestal.

Roberts, who heads the National Security Committee, an organization backing UMT, said the argument by UMT opponents that mass armies are outmoded because of modern warfare "is a fraud which i, allowed to go unchallenged, may lead this country to disaster."

The American Legion, meanwhile, called upon the House Rules Committee to bring universal military training legislation to the House floor for debate and a vote.

Approved by Committee

The bill, by Representative Towe (R., N. J.) was approved by the House Armed Services Committee last July but has not been given legislative right of way by the Rules Committee yet.

John Thomas Taylor, national legislative director for the Legion, said in a letter to Representative Allen (R., Ill.), chairman of the Rules Committee:

"Every member of Congress has had ample time and opportunity to study and analyze the bill now snagged in your committee. There is no valid reason for further hobbling this legislation and preventing a vote by House membership."

Allen was not available for comment.

Opposition to universal military training was expressed Friday night by representatives of 41 organizations affiliated with the American Council on Education. Nine groups in the council dissented from the expression.

Makes Letter Public

In challenging the idea that "push-button warfare" makes big ramies obsolete, Roberts told a news conference, at which he made public a letter from Forrestal, that "there has been a constant bleat that the next war will be a push-button war and that we won't need mass armies."

"We have not reached the stage of push-button warfare, and the best estimates are that we are not likely to for at least 10 years."

This view was backed by Forrestal in his letter to Roberts.

"We must anticipate," Forrestal wrote, that any future war might be of a total aspect involving a the outset a possible sudden and violent attack upon our homes and cities. We must, therefore, be prepared at all times for an immediate mobilization of trained men on a large scale throughout the country."

Ship Sought for Food

Trenton, N. J. Jan. 23 (AP).—Federal permission for use of the Battleship New Jersey to carry food to Europe during Easter week is being sought by Leonard Dreyfuss, chairman of the Governor's Conservation Committee.

To Start Action

London Hints United West Parley Soon

London, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—British sources said tonight that a seven-power conference may be called soon in London to start turning from words to reality British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin's plan for a united western Europe.

Bevin met with Italian Ambassador Tomaso Gallarati for a long talk today and it was believed they discussed the possibility of bringing Italy into the scheme of cooperation with Britain, France, Portugal and the so-called Benelux countries—Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg.

The next big step was expected to be on talks on Germany among the United States, Britain and France in London in mid-February. Informed sources said that France may then join her zone in Germany to the Anglo-American economic bizonia.

At the same time, it was revealed by French sources, France and Britain will begin a series of conferences designed to bring their colonial empires into the framework of a commercial and financial treaty. Communications, ports, prices, policies, common production programs and inter-colonial commerce will be discussed.

An Anglo-French delegation checking progress on cooperation under the Marshall Plan has finished talks in Rome. Other talks were scheduled with Switzerland Tuesday, with the Benelux countries at the Hague February 3 and later in Scandinavia.

Board Seeks Welfare Aide Liability Cut

The Board of Public Welfare wants Congress to narrow the base of liability of welfare administrators in cases where expenditures are found to be unlawful.

Specific legislation to this end has won approval of the board and will be submitted to Congress during the current session.

Under existing law, in cases where public assistance funds are approved for specific individuals who it is later found do not meet residence or other qualifications for such assistance, the case worker, supervisor, head of public assistance, director of public welfare and District auditor, all of whom approved the grant, may be held liable for the sum spent.

The Board of Public Welfare wants to narrow the base of the liability to cases only where there has been negligence or fraud in spending of public money.

Similar provision is in general law referring to most government agencies, both District and Federal, Raymond F. Clapp, acting welfare director, explained yestreday. The board is seeking a provision in the law to permit the administrative officer to determine whether gross negligence or fraud has been committed.

Revision of the law in this respect is one of the features of a new public assistance act that the Board of Public Welfare will send to Congress this year.

Phone Workers To Seek Election On Union Shop

By the United Press

Communications Workers of America, an independent union, announced last night that it will ask the National Labor Relations Board to conduct a union shop election this spring among its 200,000 members employed in the telephone industry.

Union President Josep E. Beirne said a union shop would be a major objective whe nthe union bargains for new contracts in a six-week period beginning April 1.

Under the Taft-Hartley law, a union cannot request a union shop unless a labor board election is first held to determine whether 51 per cent of the workers employed desire to authorize such a demand.

Earl Long Leads

New Orleans, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—Earl K. Long held a 115,580-vote margin over Sam H. Jones today in the bitter race for Governor of Louisiana, but a runoff primary was assured when Jones flatly squelched reports he would withdraw from the campaign.

Official but incomplete returns from 1864 of Louisiana's 1878 precincts gave Long, a former Governor and brother of the late Senator Huey P. Long, 264,127 votes to 145,547 for Jones, who defeated him in the hectic February, 1940, runoff which followed the "Louisiana scandals."

Greek Mutiny Reported

Chinese Reds Are Victors In Battle for Key Town

Peiping, Jan. 24 (AP).—A street-by-street fight to the death is in progress in bitter winter weather for possession of Sinlitun, 70 miles west of Mukden and a key defense bastion for that government city, pro-government Chinese press dispatches from Manchuria said today.

The Communists, who have been attacking Sinlitun for weeks, finally broke into the town after both sides had suffered heavy casualties in a battle outside, the dispatches said.

At the same time, the attackers shifted reserve forces to the vicinity of the Peiping-Mukden railway southeast of Sinlitun to bar possible government reinforcements.

Mukden reported some of the coldest weather of the season, with the temperature at 31 below zero.

Other pro-government dispatches said Nationalist troops had started a drive toward Shyangyang, Communist stronghold 30 miles southeast of Changchun, and dispersed a Communist force which tried to block the way.

Consulate Aide Accused Of $30,000 Temper

San Francisco, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—A stenographer filed a $30,000 assault suit yesterday against the consulate general of Sweden, charging the consul's legal attache kicked and beat her because her typewriting disturbed his telephone conversation.

The secretary, Joan Fillingsnes, 25, said she was typing at her desk while Rolphe Lidin, the legal attache, was talking over a nearby phone. Miss Fillingsnes contended Lidin glowered with anger, finally put down the phone, then kicked and beat her, causing spinal, thigh and arm injuries and nervous shock.

Red Ban on North Korea Visit Stymies U. N. Election Board

Seoul, Korea, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—Outright Russian refusal to allow United Nations commissioners to visit Soviet-occupied North Korea, although no surprise, left members of the U. N. commission in doubt today as to the best action to take "in order to benefit Korea as a whole."

The formal statement by Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko at Lake Success yesterday, made it evident that the U. N. group could scarcely hope to carry out its assigned task of arranging elections throughout Korea by March 31. The decision that the commissioners must make is whether to hold elections in U. S.-occupied south Korea, appeal to the U. N. "Little Assembly" for instructions, or let the matter rest until the General Assembly convenes in the fall.

K. P. S. Menon of India, acting commission chairman, said:

"The main question now before the commission is 'What is the best thing we can do to benefit Korea as a whole?'"

He said the possibility of holding elections in south Korea alone was a technical question which would have to be debated by the commission, because its original orders from the General Assembly did not provide for such action.

2 Hurt in Third Attempt To Kill Police Chief

Free Trip Offered To Young Democrats

A young Democrat from each of the 48 states will get a free trip to the party national convention in Philadelphia next July.

Roy G. Baker, Sherman, Tex., president of the Young Democratic Clubs of America, made the announcement last night in connection with a drive to enroll 1,000,000 new members before the 1948 election. The contestant in each state who enrolls the most new members will be awarded a free convention trip.

Boy at 'Elevator Tag' Riles Rus hHour Riders

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 24 (AP).—A 12-year-old boy and four janitors engaged in a game of "elevator tag" at an office building during the late afternoon rush hour here today.

The chase, covering all 19 floors of the building, lasted for half an hour, and ended only when one of the janitors cut off the power.

The boy explained to police that he had taken the elevator because he "had to go up to the toilet."

Peers Bill Due Tuesday In London

London, Jan. 24 (AP).—A long-standing argument over the future of Britain's House of Lords is expected to come to a head Tuesday.

On that day the peers will consider on second reading the Labor government's bill to reduce the Lords' power to delay legislation from the present two years to one year.

From the debate this larger question is expected to emerge: Does Britain really want a hereditary House of Lords?

During the week also Prince Philip will take his seat for the first time in the "upper" chamber. He was raised to the peerage on the eve of his marriage to Princess Elizabeth last November.

The bill to curb the only real remaining powers of the House of Lords already has been passed by the House of Commons.

Purpose of the measure is to prevent the Lords from interfering with the nationalization of the iron and steel industry. Nationalization of that industry is a Labor government objective scheduled for accomplishment in late 1948 or early 1949—just a year before the next general election is due.

Conservative lords, urging defeat of the bill curbing their powers, are expected to propose, instead, other reforms in the upper chamber.

Bombs Rock Two Sections Of Havana

Havana, Cuba, Jan. 24 (U.P.). — Two bomb explosions rocked widely separated sections of Havana last night as tension flared into violence in the wake of the fatal shooting Thursday night of Jesus Menendez, Communist member of the House of Representatives and head of the powerful Sugar Workers Union.

One person was injured by the bombings, and police patrols were doubled to prevent rioting when Menendez's body was brought to lie in state at the national capitol. Menendez was fatally shot on a train last night in Oriente Province.

The Communists were not alone in protesting the shooting. The Congress issued a joint manifesto "severely condemning . . . the treacherous killing."

But the army high command, openly at odds with congressional leadership over the incident, vigorously defended Capt. Joaquin Castillas, who fired the fatal shot when Menendez, claiming parliamentary immunity, resisted arrest.

Chief of Staff Maj. Gen. Genovevo Perez Damera said that Menendez "not only incited sugar workers to illegal strikes but also incited the soldiers to rebellion."

In reply, the Communists said "Menendez was slain on governmental orders . . . We are already under a military dictatorship."

In Menendez' home town, Encrucijada, all businesses were shut down yesterday.

Communist-dominated unions in Santiago effected a 10-minute memorial work stoppage.

Action Follows Warning of 'Most Terrible' Conflict

Lake Success, Jan. 24 (AP).—The Security Council today directed Pakistan and India to renew negotiations here in efforts to settle their dispute over fighting in Kashmir.

The Council acted after Philip J. Noel-Baker, British Secretary for Commonwealth Relations, bluntly told delegates war in India would be 'the most terrible conflict in the history of mankind."

"For the new Asia it would be a disaster," he said. "It would be a bitter defeat for the United Nations.

"The alternative to war is agreement here. Both sides have said they want the will of the people of Kashmir to prevail. Let them continue their conferences and bring us a plan. I am confident of success."

Meet to Lay Groundwork

Fernand van Langehove of Belgium, Council president, met with the representatives of the two dominions almost immediately and laid the groundwork for the talks.

Declaring that "the situation urgently requires all the powers of the Security Council," United States Delegate Warren R. Austin suggested that the Council supervise the interim situation in Kashmir. He said political and military conditions must be created in the princely state, provisionally acceded to India, in which the inhabitants can freely express their will in a plebiscite on whether to join India or Pakistan.

Austin did not make a formal motion and later declined to expand his views to reporters.

Commission Decided On

The Council already has decided to create a three-man commission to go to Kashmir, and presumably Austin believes that any interim administration set up in Kasmir should be responsible to the council's organ.

India now has troops in the princely state in attempts to dislodge what she says are invading tribesmen from the north. In bringing the case to the Council, the New Delhi government charged Pakistan with aiding these invaders.

Dimes Campaign Lags With Gifts Behind Last Year

The District's 1948 "March of Dimes" is not expected to reach last year's record of $176,433 unless contributions are stepped up, Edgar Morris, drie chairman, reported yesterday.

Failure to reach the 1947 goal will hamper the foundation's aid to victims of the malady and retard the progress of research to prevent infantile paralysis, Morris emphasized.

He urged Washingtonians not to wait for coin-cards to be mailed to them, but to mail contributions in an envelope to the March of Dimes, Room 320, the District Building, Washington, D. C.

Ky. Mountain Tunneled To Tap Va. Coal Vein

Jenkins, Ky., Jan. 24 (AP).—Construction engineers today signaled completion of the biggest engineering project in eastern Kentucky, to tap rich coal reserves in Wise County, Va.

A hole has been punched through mile-high Pine Mountain, and the first Chesapeake & Ohio train is expected to negotiate the tunnel and 16-mile railroad link with the line's Big Sandy Valley, Ky., division on Tuesday.

Housing Shortage Called 'Imaginary' by Owner Group

A representative of apartment owners yesterday termed the housing shortage "a figment of the imagination" while a labor spokesman warned that doubled rents and a flood of evictions would follow the end of rent control.

"If this is not the time to permit Federal rent controls to expire, then that time will never come," John F. Owen, president of the National Apartment Owners Association, told a subcommittee of the Senate Banking Committee. He declared the "violent upheaval" of the war had passed and the Nation's population was now settled permanently in a "true postwar pattern."

Rents have increased, Owen declared, less than 7 per cent since 1942, while average income had more than doubled and as a result rent absorbs only 9 to 24 per cent of income compared with 20 per cent before the war.

Exceeds Job Worries

On the other hand, John W. Edelman, speaking for the Textile Workers Union (CIO), told the committee the housing shortage was so acute that a textile worker in the South was "far less fearful of losing his job than of being put out of his house." A study of the Boston area, he testified, showed that many landlords had ignored the rent control law altogether and already had doubled rents.

Donald Montgomery of the United Auto Workers (CIO) asked Congress not only to extend controls but to roll back the 15 per cent increase to which many tenants agreed last spring in exchange for new leases. He urged also that the rent administrator be empowered to enforce ceilings by suing violators for triple damages.

Asks Early Hearing

Another move toward anti-inflation was made by Representative Javits (R., N. Y.), who asked Chairman Wolcott (R., Mich.) of the House Banking Committee to schedule early hearings on his bill to ration meat. Although Wolcott declined to comment, it was reported his committee did not intend to consider meat rationing.

The Javits bill is identical with a measure introduced by Senator Flanders (R., Vt.), on which hearings are under way before the Senate Banking Committee. It would authorize the President to determine when meat rationing should start and on what basis and to set up a program which would go into effect in 30 days if not vetoed by Congress.

In Chicago, the Associated Press reported, representatives of the National Conference of Brewery and Soft Drinks Workers said they would ask Secretary of Agriculture Anderson to work out a grain reduction program that would not affect barley malt. They said brewers had proposed measures which would conserve essential grains "without having any substantial effect on employment."

Truman Gets Dennison as Naval Aide

By The Associated Press

President Truman yesterday selected Capt. Robert L. Dennison, commander of the battleship Missouri, as his new naval aide, the fourth since he assumed the Presidency.

Dennison

Dennison this week will relieve Rear Admiral James H. Foskett who, like Dennison, met the President on an official sea voyage. Foskett has been naval aide since June 27, 1946.

Foskett is due for sea duty and is being assigned to command of Cruiser Division 12 of the Atlantic Fleet. His flagship will be the USS Huntington.

Spelling Lesson Paper Results In Arrests of Four

Newark, N. J., Jan. 24.—A 15-year-old schoolboy who tried to light his way through a saloon burglary with his spelling lesson was arrested by Newark detectives on juvenile delinquency charges.

Detectives John F. Stechman and Frank Vanderstreet, investigating a tavern burglary, found a partially burned scrap of paper on the floor with a spelling lesson and a part of a name, "Geral . . ."

They traced it to the East Side High School Annex, where they found such a lesson had been given. Examining the school's records, they found the boy who had written the lesson and picked up the two 14-year-old companions. They also arrested Joseph Zadie, 20.

According to police, Zadie, afraid to using a flashlight, asked for a scrap of paper. The 15-year-old came up with the spelling lesson, which was used as a torch.

Arabs Charged With Murder Of 42 Jews

Jerusalem, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—The Palestine government today charged 17 Arabs with the murder of 42 Jews in the Haifa oil refinery riot last December 30. Twenty others were charged with wounding Jews.

The riot broke out after members of Irgun Zvai Leumi rolled a barrel-bomb off a truck and into the consolidated refinery, killing six Arabs. Incensed Arab workers turned on Jewish employes. Then both Arab and Jewish workers struck, threatening Palestine with a shortage of oil products.

It was the first severe government action against Arabs since Jewish-Arab clashes flared up after the partition decision in movement.

Two days ago authorities hacked down Arab trees at the village of Yazur as a punitive measure for Arab attacks.

Terrorists blew up a section of the Jerusalem-Jaffa road today and one Arab was killed north of Nahrayiya.

The Arab was slain last night when a military truck crashed into a Jewish armored bus, overturning it. The occupants, believing they were under attack by Arabs, opened fire. Arab villagers returned it and in the exchange the Arab was killed.

Saudi Arabia Reported Ready To Turn From U. S. to Britain

Jerusalem, Jan. 24 (AP).—Arab diplomats here today said King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia may take his kingdom back into the British sphere of influence shortly.

His foreign minister, Emir Feisal, is reported planning a trip to London for one of the conferences in which Britain is busy building political fences in the Arab countries of the Middle East. The treaty with Iraq, whose ratification by Iraq is uncertain, was only the first of a series planned by the British in this part of the world. A similar pact is anticipated with Trans-Jordan soon.

Ibn Saud left the British sphere when American oil men showed him the way to wealth through royalties. An Arab diplomat just back from the desert kingdom said that "but for the natural conservatism of the old man himself Feisal would have broken all relations with the United States on November 30, the day after the United Nations voted for partition. Feisal openly says he proposed such a break but was hampered because only the king makes such decisions."

This diplomat said, however, the emissaries had been busy in Saudi Arabia since then and Ibn Saud now "may even be willing to toss over his 18 million dollars a year from American oil profits in order to bark the United States' shins for backing partition."

4-Billion Tax Slash Safe, Doughton Says

To Offer Bill to That Effect Tomorrow; Sees Substantial Debt Payment Possible

By the United Press

Representative Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.) said last night that four billion dollars can be slashed from the Nation's tax revenues without hurting the Government's financial structure.

Doughton, ranking Democrat on the House Ways and Means Committee, said he has drawn up a bill which would cut taxes by that amount. He will offer it tomorrow when the group meets to consider Republican proposals to cut income levies.

"I think revenues can safely be reduced that much and still leave a substantial amount to apply on the public debt," Doughton said. "Of course, there are some uncertainties in the situation but the probabilities are that this can be done."

Doughton contended that a bill by Committee Chairman Harold Knutson (R., Minn.) "cuts taxes too much now." The Knutson proposal would decrease Federal revenues by amounts estimated variously at $5,600,000,000 and $6,300,000,000.

Republicans seem united behind the Knutson bill which, according to Speaker Joseph W. Martin, jr., will be passed "as is" by a week from tomorrow. Debate is scheduled to begin Thursday.

But Democrats, despite Doughton's proposal, admitted they have still to agree on a counter-strategy.

House Democratic leader Sam Rayburn of Texas said party policy would not be laid down until Wednesday. A full meeting of House Democrats is scheduled for that day. He added that no attempt will be made to bind Democrats at the session.

Speakers will include: Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, District Engineer Commissioner; Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, Federal Works Administrator; Representative Jesse P. Wolcott (R., Mich.) and Repreesntative Paul Cunningham (R., Iowa).

Girl Admits Treason Guilt; Helped German Captive Flee

St. Louis, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—Gloria Sammartino, 25, who went the way her heart dictated—with a German prisoner of war—was charged with treason as the result.

Despite the seriousness of the charge filed by the FBI, she pleaded guilty when arraigned before a United States commissioner.

Miss Sammartino pleaded tearfully with FBI men that her prime offense was falling in love. The man she fell in love with was Rudolph von Hyeburg. She helped him escape and that, the FBI alleged, amounted to treason.

Hyeburg was captured here Wednesday, working in a lunchroom. A patron had seen his face on a "wanted" poster in the postoffice and recognized it. He had escaped from the U. S. Army hospital at Waltham, Mass., February 1, 1946.

"This will kill my wife," Hyeburg remarked to the arresting G-men. They went to a rooming house where they found Miss Sammartino. She and Hyeburg had been living there since August.

Gerald B. Norris, FBI chief here, said Miss Sammartino had been employed as a diet cook at the Army hospital in Waltham. Hyeburg was assigned to the kitchen as a helper. There, Miss Sammartino told Norris, they fell in love.

On February 1, 1946, he told the G-men, she and the prisoner boarded a train for New York, using tickets she had bought.

While en route she read of his escape in a Boston newspaper. In the same newspaper wa sa death notice for one John Douchet. They decided to adopt that name as theirs.

Dismissal Asked Of Suit by NMU

Denham, NLRB Council, in Brief Cites Taft-Hartley Act Proviso

By the United Press

Robert N. Denham, general counsel for the National Labor Relations Board, told a Federal district court yesterday that Congress has the right to deny Communists use of the board in order to keep them from serving the interests of Russia.

He asked dismissal of a suit by the National Maritime Union (CIO) which contends the Taft-Hartley Act is unconstitutional in requiring labor union officers to file non-Communist affidavits to obtain board services.

Denham's arguments were made in a brief filed with the court. A hearing will be held February 2.

"The reason for denying to Communists and their supporters the benefits of resort to the board are not punitive," he said.

"Disqualification is a preventive measure, intended to guard against the evil of misuse of power to provoke strikes, an evil against which Congress may constitutionally guard," he said.

He asserted that Communists promoted Soviet interests within labor unions.

Denham cited statements by union President Joseph Curran in the union newspaper to support his argument that Communists seek control of labor organizations to provoke class warfare.

Denham said Curran had written last November 21 that "Communist leaders within the union, after their defeat in the convention, had undertaken to destroy the union, by promoting unnecessary strikes and by refusing to settle grievances amicably with employers."

The Labor Board counsel also cited testimony of Louis Budenz, one-time managing editor of the Communist Daily Worker in New York, that the Allis Chalmers strike of 1941 had been called to assist the foreign policy of Russia, instead of for economic objectives.

"Congress believed," Denham said, "that officers of labor organizations who are Communists, or supporters of communism, might in periods of national emergency utilize their power within such organizations to call and promote strikes contrary to the interests of our Government, if those interests happen to be opposed to the interests of a foreign power, Soviet Russia."

Ballot Place Refused

Curran filed the suit after the board refused to put his union on the ballot in bargaining elections for seamen employed by two Great Lakes steamship companies, M. A. Hanna Co. and Wilson Transit Co. The board refused on the grounds that the law prohibits use of its services to unions whose officers fail to comply with the filing provisions of the law.

Curran contended—despite his anti-Communist feelings—that his union is being denied its constitutional rights to use established Government services. He asked the courts to overrule the board.

NAM Lauds Results Of Taft-Hartley Act

New York, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—The Taft-Hartley Act, six months after its enactment, is functions in the public interest with the support of the workers, the National Association of Manufacturers declared today.

"Contrary to critics' statements that the labor-management relations (Taft-Hartley) Act would substantially increase strikes," the NAM said, "the figures released by the Bureau of Labor Statistics discredit that prophecy."

"In 1946, there were 4985 strikes; in 1947, there were 3600. The number of workers involved in strikes also decreased, and the number of man-days lost through strike idleness in 1947 dropped to less than one-third of the 1946 levels."

Plane Headed Here Missing

refused to try an instrument landing after another transport craft had made several approach runs and missed. The latter landed at an alternate airport, the tower said.

The Civil Aeronautics Administration's communications system was standing by on all available radio wavelengths throughout the day and traced "at least 40" reports of the plane without avail.

Baltimore cleared the plane for a landing at 8:36 a. m., but the pilot reported he could not come down and went on.

State Police in Maryland and Virginia have been alerted, but air search was not possible.

Pilot of the plane is believed to be Lieut. Bill Schuh, but identity of the crewmen or passengers was not disclosed.

Michigan Survey Strong for Tax Cut, Aid

By The Associated Press

A survey of Michigan citizens conducted by Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) shows large majorities in favor of foreign aid and income-tax cuts and against price controls and rationing.

The Senator made public yesterday the 6421 replies to a questionnaire he sent out last fall.

Asked, "Are you in favor of aids to European countries?" 86.4 per cent answered "Yes," 11.6 per cent "No," and 2 per cent expressed no opinion.

On no other issue was the vote so decisive. The answers ran 65.2 per cent in favor of income-tax cuts and 30.8 per cent against.

The answers put tax reduction first in the list of things Congress ought to consider first. Next came aid to Europe and then the high cost of living.

On the Taft-Hartley Labor Act, 47.9 per cent said to let it alone, 10.1 per cent to modify it, 24.4 per cent to strengthen it, 8 per cent to repeal it, and 9.6 per cent gave no opinion.

Reestablishment of price controls was favored by 30.8 per cent and opposed by 63.2 per cent. On rationing the ratio was 79 per cent against and 12.9 per cent for.

The tabulation showed 55.9 per cent against wage controls and 33.3 per cent in favor. The division on production controls was 67.8 per cent against and 21.6 per cent for.

To the question of whether Congress should establish universal military training, 56.2 per cent answered "yes" and 37.6 per cent said "no." Temporary lifting of immigration quotas to admit displaced persons was opposed by 57.7 per cent and favored by 36.1 per cent.

Senator Taylor Drafts Two Bills to End Segregation in D. C. Schools, Public Places

Senator Glen H. Taylor (D., Idaho) has drafted two bills to outlaw discrimination and segregation in District schools and public places.

Confidential drafts of the bills were mailed out Friday by the Senator's office to scores of District leaders and organizations for comment. New bills will be drawn up and introduced in the Senate after the comment and criticism is analyzed, an aide to the Senator said.

In a letter accompanying the drafts Senator Taylor said he felt Congress should take "speedy action" to abolish discrimination here because of the "great dangers inherent in this situation." He pointed out the President's Committee on Civil Rights has found that legislation "of this sort" is an urgent necessity.

"Our prestige abroad is being seriously weakened by our domestic policy toward minority groups, as the recent action of the Republic of Panama has clearly demonstrated," the Idahoan said. "Our obligation to our Negro veterans is still unpaid. The matter cannot be put off longer, at least here in the Nation's Capital."

One of the proposed bills would assure equality of treatment in District schools, supported in whole or part by public funds. It not only deals with school admittance and facilities, but also provides for equal treatment in the way of participating in clubs or any other in-school activity.

The second bill would "protect human dignity in the seat of the government of the United States." It would abolish segregation and discrimination in all places of public accommodation, resorts and amusements, hospitals and clinics. Violators would be subject to a maximum fine of $500.

Two Brothers Frozen In Home Near Coal Mine

Marion, Ill., Jan. 24 (U.P.).—Two brothers were found frozen to death beside an empty coal grate in their home only a few yards away from a coal mine that paid them royalties.

A passerby found the bodies of Marshall Moren, 79, who was blind, and his brother, Josh, 82, in their small, barren shack.

The coal mine gave the brothers a 25 cents a ton royalty. They had money in the bank and in the pockets of their overalls.

Cartoonist Caniff Is Caller; Won't Tell 'Steve's' Future

The Washington Post

STEVE GETS A GIFT FROM THE BOSS—Milton Caniff, who visited us yesterday, puts ear-muffs on Steve Canyon for protection against the local weather

You probably will have read it before you see this, but . . .

Milt Caniff's comic strip fans get qualms today, trying to get that converted B-24 through the snowy mountains to the sick girl at Nugo Pass.

Broad-shouldered Cartoonist Caniff, husky enough to get into the act himself, stomped through snowy Washington yesterday, came up to our art department, drew some ear muffs on Steve Canyon of the comic strip and chortled in sadistic glee:

"I always like to leave the reader hanging on a cliff!"

But when he gets home he expects a minor mail flood, readers wanting to know in advance if the mercy errand is completed without mishap.

"But the situation isn't dire enough yet," he hinted. "Sometimes, when the going gets rough for Steve, or one of the principals, the letters and telegrams come in by the thousands, seeking advance information." "These comic strip characters actually get to become people to people."

When Caniff kicked Raven Sherman off the back end of that truck in "Terry and the Pirates," which he used to draw she bled "for a week before she died," he grinned. "When she finally was killed off, flowers poured in."

Caniff, and "Steve," swore in as a major in the Air Force reserve, complete with serial number and seven copies of every thing, will show up on a program at Bolling Field today to soup up the reserve campaign.

Trial Board Votes to Fire Policeman

The Police Trial Board yesterday recommended the dismissal of Jerome J. Jones, 28, from the police force after finding him guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer, maltreating a prisoner and drawing his revolver without justification.

Jones

Wesley S. Williams, counsel for Jones, immediately announced he would appeal the board's action to the District's Commissioners.

The decision followed a four-hour hearing on Friday on four charges in connection with Private Jones' arrest of Peter J. Stathis, 25, on the night of January 3. The policeman's charge of disorderly conduct against Stathis was dismissed in Municipal Court on January 6.

Jones denied the charges and the board dismissed one, that of lying to a superior officer, at the end of the hearing. The unbecoming conduct charge included two specifications, that the policeman entered the premises of Mrs. Mae Davis at 650½ Newton pl. nw. without lawful right, and that he arrested Stathis without justification.

The Tenth Precinct policeman, who was suspended after his charge against Stathis was dismissed in court, has been before the trial board once previously, on December 12, 1947, since he joined the force in 1943. He pleaded guilty to sleeping on his beat and was fined $75.

On July 5, 1946, a coroner's jury ruled he was justified in shooting a man who died shortly afterward, finding that Jones acted in defense of his own life while performing his duty.

Jones, who is married and has four children, served in the Navy for two years as a recruit instructor. He lived at 321 K st. se.

Col. Leonard Is Indorsed For Huff's Post

Col. Waldron E. Leonard, Veterans Information Center director, has been indorsed for the post of director of public welfare, vacant since the death of Ray L. Huff.

Indorsement came from the Federation of Civic Associations Friday night.

The Federation also approved the Auchincloss plan for home rule. Association members suggested the bill be amended to require election of council members by plurality rather than majority, and to continue to vest hiring and firing power in the board of education rather than the school superintendent.

The Federation indorsed extension of rent control for another year, opposed efforts of the D. C. Recreation Board to obtain possession of swimming pools now under the Interior Department and to supervise National Guard Armory functions.

250 to Attend Social Welfare Sessions Here

More than 250 leaders of national health and welfare organizations and a large number of citizens groups' representatives are to attend the National Conference on Social Welfare Needs and the Workshop of Citizens Groups which begins here tomorrow.

The conference, which will continue through Wednesday, is to be held in the Willard and Washington Hotels and is being sponsored by the National Social Welfare Assembly. The workshop is sponsored by Community Chests and Councils, Inc.

Two-fold purpose of the meeting is to inventory health and welfare needs and to make practical recommendations to the citizen representatives so volunteers can put specific programs into action in their home areas.

First session of the conference is to be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning at the Willard Hotel, with open meetings of the Commissions on Citizen Participation, Education, Health, Housing, Recreation, Social Security, and Special Needs of Children and Youth.

West Coast Man Gets Senate D. C. Committee Post

Thomas S. Herndon, 37, of Tacoma, Wash., has been appointed to a $7500-a-year post with the Senate District Committee.

Senator Harry P. Cain (R., Wash.) chairman of the District Subcommittee on fiscal affairs in charge of tax and pay matters, said Henderson would be assigned to work on those subjects. A detailed study of the new District budget is slated to be among his first jobs.

Henderson, a lawyer, has been employed in Federal service as a field examiner for the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, Calif., and as assistant counsel in the Shanghai office of UNRRA.

Hungary Protests U. S. Decision To Keep Horses

The Hungarian Legation has officially protested the decision of the Senate's Armed Services Committee that the horses claimed by Hungary and brought to this country as Army war booty should stay here.

In a long note, dated January 16, the Hungarian Minister, Rustem Vambery, advised Secretary of State George C. Marshall of the Hungarian government's protest against the committee's ruling on subjects of international law. The Hungarian Minister advised the Department of State that if the committee's decision is upheld by Congress, the Hungarian government will take the matter to the heads of the American, British and Russian Missions in Budapest.

Senator Wayne Morse (R., Oreg.) announced the committee voted unanimously for the plan to keep the horses, which his subcommittee recommended after extensive hearings last month.

Undies' Cost Irks Langer

Or what?" The Senator tossed his last question mark at a group of Bureau of Labor Statistics experts, testifying at the pay bill hearing yesterday.

The BLS staff had shown up with a briefcase full of facts and figures, but was admittedly unprepared to discuss the precise price problems of Washington. Langer elicited the following off-the-cuff diagnoses:

"Washington has been growing steadily . . . rapidly. . . ."

"It may be the commercial rents are high . . .?"

"Washington is not a manufacturing city, so therefore commodities must be shipped in."

"The income of the people here is steady. . . ."

"Prices here are as low as other places during depression periods."

Offer Crumb of Consolation

The Labor Department officials, headed by Ewan Clague, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, did offer highest-cost-of-living Washington a few crumbs of consolation, such as:

Prices have risen at a faster rate, and at a great rate, in other cities.

Seattle, Scranton, Savannah, San Francisco, Portland, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Norfolk, New York, New Orleans, Mobile, Memphis (Tenn.), Manchester (N. H.), Los Angeles, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, Boston, Birmingham and Baltimore—all pay more for food than Washington.

Minneapolis and New York pay more for clothing than D. C.

Rents in the District have risen but 1.6 per cent since August, 1939, as against 11 per cent for the Nation, but the Capital has no close rivals for the high cost of housing.

Mental Angle Probed

The Langer subcommittee yesterday also probed the possibility that economic difficulties arising from prices outracing pay might tend to increase mental breakdown. This theory was pshawed by Dr. Winfred Overholser, director of St. Elizabeths Hospital; Dr. Alvin R. Sweeney, head of Gallinger Hospital, and Dr. Joseph S. Gilbert, Gallinger psychiatrist.

The medical men agreed that the "general run of Federal employes" tends to be "a bit less susceptible" to mental breakdown than the national average because they have relative security and opportunity for advancement.

National Headquarters For Stassen Is Opened

Minneapolis, Jan. 24 (AP).—National headquarters for the campaign of Harold Stassen for the Republican nomination for president was opened here today.

Warren E. Burger, St. Paul attorney and longtime friend and associate of the former Minnesota governor, was named to direct the national campaign operations with the title of executive deputy.

Bernhard Levander, Republican state chairman, will serve as office manager.

Maryland's Governor Joins Hagerstown VFW Post

Eisenhower Groups Quit

Hampshire Eisenhower-for-President League said it would remain in existence but would cease "organized and concerted efforts" toward Ike's nomination. The league, which had entered a slate of candidates pledged to the Chief of Staff in the Nation's first presidential primary March 9, expressed "profound regret" that Ike closed the door.

"It is now left to each candidate who filed for Eisenhower," the league added, "to be governed by his own judgment regarding his future course of action."

Two New Hampshire candidates, despite Eisenhower's declaration, said they would enter the primary anyway pledged to the war leader.

In Washington, meanwhile, Senator Tobey (R., N. H.), leader of the Eisenhower movement in his State, accepted the general's announcement with regret and declared that the decision means "the Nation has lost a potential great leader as Chief Executive."

The Senator further observed that "only a truly big man would pass up an opportunity to become President of the United States."

Eisenhower's letter, he said, "demonstrates the innate modesty of the man and his character, and only makes acceptance of his decision more difficult, because of the consciousness of the loss of values to the country in such leadership."

Milton R. Polland, leader of the draft-Eisenhower movement in Wisconsin, announced at Milwaukee he would accede to the general's wishes and indicated he might throw his support to Senator Taft (R., Ohio) or Gov. Earl Warren of California. Another Wisconsin supporter, A. B. Pinkerton of Green Bay, said he had not yet decided to withdraw because he thought Ike "too big and too good a man to refuse if he is called."

The Illinois Eisenhower for President Club found itself with $16,000 in campaign funds and a truckload of "I'm for Ike" buttons but no candidate.

In Oregon, however, the Eisenhower forces said they would ignore the national organization's action and enter the general's name in the primary anyway.

Harold G. Holcombe, jr., chairman of the movement in Connecticut, said his group had ceased operations.

Leonard W. Finder, publisher of the Manchester (N. H.) Evening Leader, to whom Eisenhower addressed his decision to keep out of politics, appeared unready to accept the general's decision as final. Yesterday he published an open letter to Ike on the front page of his paper in which he asked: "Is it not rather for the people to conclude whether they will persist or desist in their movements to draft you?"

Here in Washington Eisenhower's action revived talk of Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.), as a potential dark-horse nominee. It was expected the Michigan delegation to the Republican National Convention in June would continue a "favorite son" vote for Vandenberg as long as there appeared to be a chance of his nomination.

While Vandenberg has done much to remove himself from consideration as a candidate, he has observed that no man could decline the nomination if it were thrust upon him. Eisenhower's withdrawal was seen as possibly creating a deadlock between Taft and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, both announced candidates, in which case the Senate Foreign Relations chairman might appear as an acceptable compromise nominee.

Negro Council Picks Dewey as First Choice

Des Moines, Jan. 24 (AP).—Fred D. Hawkins of Des Moines, chairman of the Midwest Council of Negro Republican Clubs, announced today the organization's present sentiment favors Gov. Thomas Dewey of New York for the GOP presidential nomination, with Harold Stassen of Minnesota as second choice and Gov. Dwight Green of Illinois as running mate to either of the men.

Hawkins said also that the group "sees no need for Negroes to support Henry Wallace's third party movement."

He said the group will meet in Chicago April 3. Dewey, Stassen and Green, along with Senator Robert Taft (R., Ohio), have been invited to address the meeting.

States represented in the council are Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Michigan, Indiana and Kansas.

Avialable If Wanted, O'Mahoney Announces

Denver, Jan. 24 (AP).—Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming said today that he would be "available" for the Democratic vice presidential nomination if party leaders feel at convention time his candidacy would strengthen the party's ticket.

"Political availability is difficult to measure in advance of a national convention," the Wyoming senator said. "My principle and primary interest is the reelection of President Truman. Everything else is secondary."

Hartley Sees Lash Used In Rejection of Hawkes

By The Associated Press

Representative Hartley (R., N. J.) said yesterday the New Jersey Republican State Committee acted "under the lash of Governor Driscoll "in refusing to name United States Senator Hawkes (R., N. J.) as the GOP candidate for reelection, and termed it a "flagrant example of power politics."

"Under the flimsy excuse of desiring to elect a United States Senator who has 'broad international views, Governor Driscoll has presented the faithful David Van Alstyne, jr., as his choice for the job," Hartley said.

Hartley, who has announced he will retire from the Washington political scene when his term expires next January, said Hawkes has been labeled a "conservative" by "a few exponents of overdeveloped nationalism" because he has opposed policies "which the majority of the people of the country are convinced will lead this Nation to bankruptcy."

Quality

Quality in the Chickering piano means more than the use of the finest materials. It means the most painstaking care in the fashioning of these materials into a Chickering. And because there is no substitute for the experience of a century and a quarter of fine piano making, the quality inherent in the Chickering piano is supreme.

Sex Offense Parley Called for Friday

Fay to Be Invited To House Study Of Legislation

Representative A. L. Miller (R., Nebr.) said yesterday he will ask U. S. Attorney George Morris Fay to confer next Friday on proposed legislation to curb sex offenders in the District.

Miller said Fay would be asked to meet in an executive session with the House District Subcommittee on Health, Education and Recreation. Fay has been drafting new legislation to deal with sex offenses.

Open Hearing Scheduled

The subcommittee, of which Miller is chairman, has also scheduled an open hearing to follow the meeting with Fay to receive testimony on a resolution to promote patriotic history teaching in the publicly supported schools of Washington.

Another was set for 10 a. m. Wednesday on bills to increase barbers' license fees, and to permit out of town doctors to be licensed here if they have a certificate from a national examining board.

Starling 'War' Discussed

The subcommittee heard Dr. Lytle S. Adams, inventor of the airmail pickup system, discuss his plan for fighting starlings with crude oil. Oil would be spread around feeding and roosting places, with the idea that it would be spread from the birds' feathers to their eggs. Adams said oil on the eggs keeps them from hatching.

Miller said an appointment would be arranged for Adams to meet the District Commissioners, probably next Tuesday, to discuss his plan with them.

'Defends' Mother

Youth Slays Drunken Dad 'By Mistake'

Mount Clemens, Mich., Jan. 24 (U.P.).—A 17-year-old boy shot and killed his drunken father "by mistake" today.

"I thought he was hurting my mother," he said.

Prosecutor Edward A. Jacobs described the circumstances:

Stephen Kalisz, 41, thought his wife Harriet, 37, had taken poison because he had come home drunk. He heated milk as an antidote and she resisted when he tried to pour it down her throat. In the midst of this struggle, Stephen, jr., fired a bullet from a .22 caliber rifle into his father's chest.

Mrs. Kalisz said her husband had signed up for the Air Force and was to have left for active duty Monday.

The boy was booked for "investigation of homicide." Jacobs said he may find the homicide to have been justified "after due investigation."

Murder of Father Laid to Boy, 15

Somerville, Mass., Jan. 24 (AP).—Fifteen-year-old Albert D. Laliberte was booked on a murder charge today in the carving knife slaying of his 36-year-old father last night.

Police Capt. John J. Kilhourey quoted young Laliberte as saying he went to the defense of his mother after his father had pinned her to the floor and began choking her after an an argument.

GOP Charges Election Fraud In Wise County

Richmond, Va., Jan. 24 (AP).—The State Central Committee of the Republican Party charged today that there were indications of widespread violations of election laws in Wise County last November 4 and called upon the State Board of Elections to investigate.

The GOP committee said it had in its possession "numerous affidavits" indicating election law violations in the last general election.

Affidavits in possession of the State Central Committee charge among other things that Wise County officers, specifically mentioned, occupied desks in certain polling places and, in violation of the law, instructed voters how to mark their ballots, the GOP statement said.

Other charges allege that one nonresident was solicited to vote in the name of another person, that insane and illiterate persons were voted by mail, that voters of long standing were illegally purged at the polls, that one specified registrar who holds another county job does not live in the precinct and refused to register many persons, including qualified Negroes.

The committee also said it had received information that 682 mail ballots were secured from the Wise electoral board but only 578 were used. Investigation by the electoral board, the committee stated, will show whether there were proper requests made for the 682 ballots, of which 104 were not voted.

The charges were made in a statement signed by Earle Lutz, executive director of the State Central Committee of the Republican Party.

At Naval Medical Center at Bethesda he was reported in satisfactory condition.

Budapest, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—Hungary and Romania today signed a 20-year friendship and military aid pact providing for joint military action against any attacker.

Non-Partisan Vote Sought

Arlington's representatives to the Virginia General Assembly yesterday promised to consider introducing a bill to hold a local referendum on the issue of non-partisan elections.

The promise was made to a seven-member delegation of county citizens, who would like to see Arlington's County and School Board races made non-partisan.

James Franklin, chairman of the group, said that Delegates George Damm and Maynard Magruder, and State Senator Charles R. Fenwick were "very considerate" and promised to study the proposed bill.

They promised a yes-or-no answer on the matter "as early as possible," Franklin said.

The seven callers were all members of Arlington's Joint Legislative Committee, made up of 17 different county organizations. The group has spearheaded the fight for nonpartisan primaries in both elections.

Senator Fenwick, however, yesterday declined to make any comment on his meeting with the delegation. According to Franklin; however, he told his seven callers that it would be difficult to introduce the proposed bill immediately.

The last election for the Arlington County Board, conducted last fall, was nonpartisan by mutual consent of both the Democratic and Republican Parties.

Teachers' Strike Voted in Chicago

Walkout Hinges On Failure to Get Pay by Tuesday

Chicago, Jan. 24 (AP).—Leaders of the AFL Chicago Teachers Union, which claims to represent more than half of the city's 14,000 public school teachers, voted unanimously today to strike Tuesday unless their pay checks are released.

Postponement of the City Council's approval of the record school board budget prevented issuance of the teachers' checks Friday. The union's leaders charged the delay "unreasonable."

One thousand members of the Men's Teachers Club have voted a sitdown strike, beginning Monday, in the classrooms.

The school board5s $103,500,000 annual budget contains a raise for teachers and a tax levy of $96,972,000, but City Council's finance committee did not approve the levy when it met yesterday.

Mayor Martin H. Kennelly said the council will meet Monday to take immediate action after receiving a recommendation from the finance committee.

John Fewkes, union president, said the council's action will be made known to the teachers by radio Monday night and that they will be advised at that time whether to report for work Tuesday.

The strike threats were seen as a possible hindrance to plans for midyear graduations, set for Thursday.

Wright Gets Praise From President

President Truman yesterday accepted "with great regret" the resignation of T. P. Wright as administrator of Civil Aeronautics.

Wright

Wright wrote Mr. Truman Wednesday saying there were three reasons for his quitting: a need for an income "substantially above" his $10,000 salary; an apparent unlikelihood of promotion, and "very fine outside offers," one of which he intends to accept.

The President said Wright had given "outstanding service" to "help win the war and subsequently to develop a strong civil aviation industry."

Wright Heads Cornell Research Foundation

New YYork, Jan. 24 (AP).—Cornell University announced appointment of Theodore P. Wright, resigned Civil Aeronautics Administrator, as president of the Cornell Research Foundation today immediately after President Truman had accepted Wright's resignation. Wright also will serve as a vice president of Cornell University.

4 Families Go To Court Over Property Line

Five suits involving four Brookmont, Md., families and their property lines have been filed in Montgomery Circuit Court at Rockville.

The parties concerned are Mrs. Myrtle Thompson, 6031 Ridge dr., a clerk in the Pentagon, her neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest L. Munsey, 6020 Broad st., Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Tiedeken, 6024 Broad st., and John P. Burke, 6027 Ridge dr.

Burke is an attorney with the D. C. corporation council's office. Munsey is a GPO employe and Tiedeken, a United States engineer now on temporary duty with the United States Army.

Mrs. Thompson disagrees with the Munseys and the Tiedekens over the property lines at the rear of her two lots and her neighbors' property. The dispute is over a distance ranging form 6 to 30 inches. Various surveys show different results, according to Charles W. Prettyman and James C. Christopher, Rockville attorneys for Mrs. Thompson.

Mrs. Thompson filed suits of $5000, each against Munsey and Tiedeken, charging trespassing and removal of her fence without legal authority. A third suit of $2000 was filed against Burke by Mrs. Thompson.

Burke, the suit alleges, eliminated part of a wall and cut holes in a hedge.

Then Mr. and Mrs. Munsey and Mr. and Mrs. Tiedeken, filed suits against Mrs. Thompson, the former for $10,000 and the latter for $6000.

Both suits charge trespassing and allege that Mrs. Thompson threw "bones, bottles, cinders, tin can," etc. on their property.

James H. Pugh, Rockville attorney for Burke, filed a general denial.

The suits are docketed for the March term of court.

Arlington Schedules Average $221 Raise

Tentative Proposal Would Cost County $144,000 a Year

All Arlington County employes tentatively are scheduled to get average yearly raises of $221 beginning February 1, County Board Chairman Daniel A. Dugan announced yesterday.

The proposal was made Friday night in an executive session of the board, which was considering the pay recommendations of the Public Administration Service, a private survey group.

Dugan said the proposal must be formally approved by the board next Saturday.

The raises would cost the county an estimated $144,000 annually, the chairman said. Arlington has about 650 employes.

Arlington police would be raised from the present $2250 to $2750 after six years, to a new range of $2400 to $3200.

Flies to Jail Term

At Falls Church—

Water Plan Referendum Set Tuesday

Resident property owners of Falls Church will vote Tuesday on a proposed one-million-dollar water expansion program.

If the landowners approve, the proposal will be submitted to the general electorate on a date to be set by Fairfax Circuit Court.

Town Attorney Larue Van Meter said the dual election system applying only to bond issues for public improvements gives the "settled residents" a chance to block any proposal that they feel might draw an unwise vote from "transients."

Officials Confident

Officials are confident the program will be approved. They contend it will solve the present water shortage and provide a source of income.

According to a prospectus, bonds would be paid off over a 35-year period, when an estimated saving of $625,000 in water costs would be effected and the town would net more than two million dollars from sale of water.

Figures are based on present cost of $100 for every million gallons purchased from Arlington County, which now supplies most of the town's water. A $65 rate would be paid for water purchased from the District, the prospectus shows.

Direct connection to the District water supply would enable Falls Church to serve virtually all of the rapidly developing area in nearby Fairfax County.

Chain Bridge Connection

The new water system would begin at the Virginia end of Chain Bridge, where a 24-inch line would connect with the District's Dalecarlia plant. A pumping station at Chesterbrook would send water through a 20-inch main to a proposed one million gallon reservoir at Mount Daniel, just outside the town.

A system of 12-inch mains would connect the reservoir with existing water lines.

In 1955, officials tentatively plan to lay a second line across the Potomac to the District system.

The prospectus was compiled by a three-man water committee recently designated by the town council.

Tuesday's voting, from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m., will be at Falls Church Town Hall.

Seattle Wizard Downs 132 Clams And His Opponent

Seattle, Jan. 24 (AP).—Seattle's clam-consuming cab driver, Richard Watson, gluped 132 little neck clams in 10 minutes today to edge out Joseph Silva of Martha's Vineyard, Mass., in the first annual "Clam Bowl" and lay claim to the world's record.

Watson also claimed the previous record of 110 clams.

Silva had never seen a little neck clam and he started slowly, studying Watson's technique. At the finish he was going like a clam dredge and might have won if the contest had lasted among five minutes—and if the contestants had survived the extra time. He ate 127 clams.

Pauley's Turn to Hurl Accusations at Stassen

"AGAINST THE GRAIN"—Edwin W. Pauley (extreme right) tells a Senate subcommittee investigating commodity market speculation that Harold E. Stassen "has combined ignorance and falsehood to indict me solely in pursuit of his own selfish ambitions." Stassen (extreme left), candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, listens quietly to his accuser. Later Stassen rose and said, "in his protestations of innocence he has actually confessed his guilt"

Pauley Says Stassen Lies

charging that Stassen "has combined ignorance and falsehood to indict me solely in pursuit of his own selfish ambitions."

"I have been seriously and perhaps irreparably harmed by Mr. Stassen's falsehoods and unfounded charges," he shouted, glaring at the Minnesota Republican presidential aspirant.

"It is only fair that the full measure of this man and his charges be made public. I have accused him of uttering deliberate untruths.

"In addition, I charge that he is utterly lacking in comprehension and understanding of the dealings and functioning of the commodity markets, the very subject matter of his charge."

He then quoted from Stassen's earlier testimony that when you buy and hold a corn future for six months "you would be holding half a million bushels of scarce corn in order to cut down your taxes. I call that hoarding compounded on top of profiteering."

"Those words — Mr. Stassen's words," Pauley shouted, shaking a finger at his opponent, "betray an ignorance of grain trading and commodity transactions as shocking as it is abysmal. A grain future is a contract to deliver or receive grain in the future. When you buy a future or sell one not a single bushel of grain is withdrawn from the market."

Pauley termed Stassen's final statement a "political statement."

He answered Stassen's charges that he had "not kept his word with Secretary o fthe Army Royall" to get out of the market when he took his present job as assistant to Royall September 3, by declaring that his operations since that time were for purposes of liquidation of his acoounts.

He repeated a statement made to The Washington Post last September that he planned to resign his Army post this month. He then added:

"When I'm relieved of my Army job, I'll be back in the market."

Resignation Delayed

His resignation, he said, has been delayed, because "I am now on temporary detail to the Senate Appropriations Committee.

His reason for reentering the market, he said, is that he expects "the inflationary trend will continue for some time." He said that only by price controls and rationing could the inflationary spiral be stopped.

He had adocated price controls before the Senate committee, he said, and to others, including Secretary Royall. In response to a question from Ferguson, he said that he would not recommend a rollback of prices without a corresponding rollback in wages, but he thought a freeze should be placed on all.

"You don't want the farmer to get too low a price, or you won't get increased production," he said. "Most farmers would welcome a freezeof commodity prices, if the corresponding things they purchase would be held to present prices."

"That would almost insure you large prices for oil, wouldn't it " Ferguson asked.

Incentive Held Needed

"You don't want prices too low," Pauley shot back. "You must have an incentive for people who are in oil production."

Although he admitted he had made a million dollars in the commodity markets since the war, Pauley asserted that all his ventures were not so fortunate. "I have other, very substantial losses, in other businesses," he said, in a reply about his income tax. "My income tax is quite complicated.

The trading by Mrs. McHenry, his mother-in-law, he said, was "not large." She made only about $100,000, he added. His father, he said, had made a profit of about $60,000.

He referred to Mrs. McHenry as "my very lovely mother-in-law."

"I loaned her some money, she made some money and we are all very happy and we all love her."

"I desire to reply to some of the false statements Mr. Stassen has made concerning me and I intend here and now to expose him and the untruths he has uttered or implied.

"The record is full of them. Here are some of the biggest:

"First: That the pattern of my trading followed the pattern of Government purchases.

"Second: That my pattern was 'in and out' of the market.

"Third: That I profited on the basis of inside information regarding a Government purchase of wheat in January, 1947.

"Fourth: That a purchase and sale of wheat by me in August, 1947, was tied to 'inside advice'. I received from Secretary Anderson.

"Fifth: That my purchases and sales of hides futures reflected the receipt of inside information.

"Sixth: That I moved in and out of the market for 2½ years with 'never a loss.'"

Uses Charts in Answer

He then used charts to answer Stassen's charges. He said that he had been in the market since January, 1945—that he is out now. "My longest position was in April, 1945, before I ever went with the Government. At no time since has my long position been that great."

He then turned to a wheat transaction, when he bought 100,000 bushels of May wheat on August 12 and sold them on August 19.

"Mr. Stassen says that transaction has additional significance because Mr. Hannegan and Secretary Anderson were my guests at Coconut Island during August. To me that means only one thing. Mr. Stassen claims I received inside information.

"Remember he says he never makes a charge or names a name until he has the proof. Well, he can't prove this one. He's already admitted under oath that Secretary Anderson could only have advised me to sell, because the Secretary didn't arrive until August 17. He's already admitted that he's making no specific charge against Secretary Anderson.

"The fact is that within three weeks after I sold those futures their prices increased 50 cents a bushel. If I had inside information, would I have sold on tion I would have held on for an additional $50,000 profit or would I take a $4100 profit, as I did? Here agkain it is obvious that Harold Stassen told another untruth."

His liquidation of his holdings after accepting his Army job has cost him $200,000 additional profit, he said—twice the amount he estimated in December it had cost him.

Claims Own Analysis

He said that much of his market information came from his own analyses of conditions, and much from his brokers. "I know my broker does not operate on the basis of inside information," he said. "He relies on his own reports and his economists.

"I would rather rely on them than on any Goernment sources."

The day lacked the color of Friday, when cross-examination of Stassen was undertaken by Democratic Senator Tydings of Maryland. Ferguson's examination, while stiff, wasn't as incisive. At one time Ferguson was questioning Pauley about a visit former Postmaster General Hannegan and Anderson had paid to his home at Coconut Island, Hawaii.

"I have heard you are a very genial host," Ferguson said.

"It's very pretty there," Pauley replied. "I'd like to have you as my guest some time." He then added that he had "had the privilege of entertaining several Republicans."

Again Ferguson paid a compliment to his reputation as a host, and Pauley, smiling added:

"You have been very kind. If I have been annoyed at times, please forgive me."

"The same here," Ferguson replied.

Soldier Does a Paul Revere in 21-Ton Howitzer

Lawton, Okla., Jan. 24 (AP).—A midnight joyride by a Fort Sill soldier in a 21-ton self-propelled 155 mm. howitzer stirred an official Army investigation today after the soldier was captured in a movie-comedy 12-mile chase.

A near-panic was started in Lawton, a town of 20,000, after the one-man blitz wrecked three cars.

The commander at Fort Sill, Maj. Gen. Clift Andrus, said the soldier, Sergt. Donald S. Williams, 24, Decatur, Tex., admitted to an inquiry board that he was intoxicated and "didn't realize what was going on until after I was captured."

He said the soldier was a radio operator and had never driven a howitzer before.

The officer gave the following account:

The soldier drove the howitzer through the fort gates. Military police gave chase immediately but were unable to stop the machine as it rolled to Lawton five miles away.

After weaving through the residential district and wrecking three cars, the soldier headed for the business section, leaving scars on the pavement.

With a task force of jeeps, command cars, black marias and police cruisers trailing, the howitzer headed back for the fort.

Thornburg 'Planted' in State Department To Influence Oil Policy, Brewster Charges

By the United Press

Senator Owen Brewster (R., Me.), yesterday charged that an oil company "planted" a $37,000-a-year director in the State Department in 1941 to influence the Government's policy on Arabian oil.

Brewster said Max W. Thornburg, a Special Assistant to the Undersecretary of State from 1941 to 1943, was guilty of "the most reprehensible conduct" by working for Lend Lease aid to Saudi Arabia so his company could obtain oil rights. Thornburg was a director fo Standard Oil Co. of California. He is no longer connected with the firm.

Former Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes, the wartime Government petroleum administrator, said Thornburg's actions were "shocking."

Both of them agreed that Thornburg appeared to have put his business interests ahead of those of the Government.

Thornburg's wartime Government service entered into a hearing by Brewster's Senate War Investigating Committee into wartime Government purchases of Arabian oil.

At More Than Double

The committee is looking into charges that the Government twice rejected chances to get Arabian oil at slightly above cost if Saudi Arabia were given lend lease aid, and later signed contracts to buy the oil at more than double the original offer.

Ickes said he had nothing to do with it because it was a "purely military" transaction over which his Petroleum Administration had no control. The contract for oil at the higher price was signed by the Navy.

Brewster said the Navy paid 1.05 a barrel for oil while the British were buying it a few hundred miles away for 40 cents a barrel.

Charles Evans Hughes, jr., attorney for Arabian-American Oil Co., which sold the oil, denied Brewster's suggestion that the firm had received "generous and solicitous treatment" from the Government.

Ickes had testified that Standard Oil Co. of California and Texas Co.—parent concerns—put pressure on him to back Lend Lease aid for Saudi Arabia so American companies could beat the British to the oil fields. Ickes said he refused.

Declines to Discuss It

"What importance do you attach to the planting of Max Thornburg in the State Department?" Brewster asked.

"I don't want to discuss it," Hughes replied.

Brewster shouted, "It was mose reprehensible conduct on the part of a Government official.

Brewster placed in the record a letter from Thornburg to Reginald Stoner, a vice president of Standard Oil of California, dated September 29, 1941. The oil company held large interests in Saudi Arabian oil. Thornburg's letter said he was opposing a proposed mission by a special envoy to find out what King Ibn Saud needed in the way of aid.

"I don't see any good coming out of getting another man into our part of the picture," he wrote. "And, of course, his interests are not ours."

Brewster said the letter indicated Thornburg was looking after his company's interests while serving in the Government. Ickes agreed.

Had Reason to Doubt

"Did you have reason to doubt his interest to the Government," Brewster questioned.

"Yes," Ickes replied. "I thought his interest was to protect the interests of the big companies."

Brewster also read into the record a "personal and confidential" letter from James A. Moffitt, president of two foreign subsidiaries of Standard Oil of California, in which he urged the parent company in 1940 to be "pro-Japanese" for business reasons.

The letter was written August 12, 1940—16 months before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. It was addressed to H. D. Collier, president of Standard Oil of California. Moffitt was beard chairman of Bohrein Petroleum Co., a refining concern in the Persian Gulf, and of Caltex Oil Co., a distributing agency jointly owned by the Texac Co. and Standard Oil of California.

"You are doing a very large business with the Japanese and therefore must take as strong a pro-Japanese position as possible to maintain this business," he wrote.

"Caltex, however, really must be anti-Japanese because we have a large investment in China, do a large business directly with China and practically nothing in Japan, and our main business is in the British Empire, which is having real difficulties with the Japanese and must be anti-Japanese at the present time."

'Satira' Appeals 15-Year Sentence

Havana, Jan. 24 (AP).—Appeal of the 15-year-sentence against Patricia Schmidt, Toledo, Ohio, dancer, for the yacht slaying of John Lester Mee of Chicago was announced by Dr. Carlos Mencio, lawyer.

His appeal to the Supreme Court said Cuban courts were without jurisdiction since the dancer was a foreigner and a member of the crew of a yacht bearing the flag of another nation.

Fraulein Won't Wed GI to Get 19 Millions

Fortune Awaits in Philadelphia as Soon Girl Can Obtain American Citizenship

Berlin, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—Germany's "million-dollar Cinderella" had an offer of marriage from an American tonight to help her collect a 19-million-dollar fortune which she wants to give to the sick children of Berlin.

Several GIs stationed here said that marriage with "Cinderella"—Ursula Bauer—was "nothing to sneeze at," and Pvt. George A. Beaudoin, an M.P. from Stamford, Conn., volunteered to marry her.

But chubby, red-haired Ursula—with a fortune dangling before her—retorted "none of these Johnnies for me."

She said she is engaged to a Hamburg engineering student and "marrying him is more important to me than GI-bride passage to a few million dollars."

Ursula claims she inherited the money from a distant American cousin, Henrietta E. Garrett of Philadelphia, 10 years ago, but war and occupation have kept her from getting to the United States to collect.

(Executors of the Garrett estate in Philadelphia reported that Ursula is only one of 26,000 claimants from 16 States and 29 foreign countries. Mrs. Garrett, widow of a snuff manufacturer, died in 1930. She left no children, the estate's value is now valud ,fi,fi $25,000,000.

United States officials here said that Ursula's fortune would remain frozen and maybe seized for reparations unless she could attain American citizenship—which would take years, if she has to sweat out the huge immigration backlog. Marriage to a United States citizen would solve her problem in a matter of minutes.

While the 23-year-old fraulein waits for a United States visa—or a United States husband—she trudges daily to the bomb-pocked office of an industrial firm where she works for a monthly salary of 200 marks—officially $20 but less than $1 on the black money market.

nually for the next five years to be spent on Nation-wide hospital improvements.

The District's share will be $298,350 a year, which must be matched on the basis of two local dollars to one Federal dollar. Dr. Ruhland said "matching" funds had been requested in the 1949 budget, now before Congress.

He called it "unfortunate" that the amount "is so small relative to the need."

Private hospitals and agencies as well as the District government are eligible to participate in the program, he pointed out. He said a public hearing will be held February 12 at Municipal Center to receive their project requests.

Projects will be selected on the basis of needs, funds available, and the sponsor's ability to begin work within "a reasonable period of time," the committee announced.

Dr. Ruhland will recommend projects to the Commissioners following the hearing. He said he hoped some could be under way "by this summer."

Although private organizations are eligible, Dr. Ruhland said he believed "public facilities should primarily benefit because they take care of persons who cannot afford to take care of themselves."

Emphasis should be placed on health centers and facilities for chronic and convalescent patients in order to "free hospital beds for acutely ill patients," he declared.

District projects to which the Federal funds might be applied, he said, include Northwest Health Center, new psychiatric building at Gallinger Hospital (present buildings then could be used for chronics and convalescents), or Gallinger's new pediatrics building.

The committee determined the District's needs using formulas prescribed by the United States Public Health Service, which administers the act. (Requirements are figured on the basis of population except in the case of tuberculosis, where the number of deaths caused between 1940 and 1944 is considered.)

Second Highest in Rejections

The committee noted that the District had the second highest rejection rate for mental disease among white registrants in the draft.

The need of mental beds in the District exceeds even the total number allowed under the hospital act.

The large number of patients hospitalized for mental deficiencies is largely the accumulated result of neglect in the field of public health over a great many years, the report states.

"Many young people leave home to work in Washington for the Government and then encounter difficulties which bring about mental maladjustments," the committee stated. "They are away from their families and the insecurity which that fact brings about causes them to get into difficulties."

FRESH BLOOD A MUST FOR FREE ENERGY

Do you feel like you are tied to a drag everytime you try to do something? If so, don't let a low blood count hold you down when you may release vibrant energy to every muscle, fibre, cell.

Every day—every hour—millions of tiny red-blood-cells must pour forth from the marrow of your bones to replace those that are worn-out. A low blood count may affect you in several ways: no appetite, underweight, no energy, a run-down condition, lack of resistance to infection and disease.

To get real relief you must keep up your blood strength. Medical authorities, by analysis of the blood, have by positive proof shown that SSS Tonic is amazingly effective in building up low blood strength in non-organic nutritional anemia. This is due to the SSS Tonic formula which contains special and potent activating ingredients.

Also, SSS Tonic helps you enjoy the food you eat by increasing the gastric digestive juice when it is non-organically too little or scanty—thus the stomach will have little cause to get balky with gas, bloat and give off that sour food taste.

Don't wait! Energize your body with rich, red-blood. Start on SSS Tonic now. As vigorous blood surges throughout your whole body, greater freshness and strength should make you eat better, sleep better, feel better, work better, play better, have a healthy color glow in your skin—firm flesh fill out hollow places. Millions of bottles sold. Get a bottle from your drug store. SSS Tonic helps Build Sturdy Health.

Chest X-Rays Pass 50,000 In Two Weeks

More than 50,000 residents have already taken advantage of the chest X-ray survey, Chairman William E. Leahy announced yesterday.

Assuming that the pace established in the first two weeks is maintained, Leahy said yesterday the first month of the survey should account for at least 100,000 residents—or one sixth the total number to be examined within six months.

This would be a "complete fulfillment" of the survey's goals, he said. Chest X-rays are available free to all residents 15 years or older.

Leahy revealed that weather conditions "seem to have no dulling effect upon public interest" in the campaign. On "some of the most inclement days," he reported, "lines have persisted at the mobile outdoor units."

X-ray units operate in Government agencies and private business establishments, with mobile units serving the residential areas. There is a mobile unit at Connecticut ave. and K st. nw., which will continue at its present site through Thursday, February 5. And the survey's central unit, at 1350 Pennsylvania ave. nw., in front of the District Building, operates seven days a week—the only unit to do so.

The survey's aim is to ferret out, control and eventially stamp out tuberculosis in the Capital.

Chest X-Ray Hours And Stations Listed

Any person over 15 years of age may drop in for free, confidential chest X-ray between the designated hours at the following locations:

Central Survey Unit, 1350 Pennsylvania ave. nw., daily, 10 a. m. to 6 p. m.

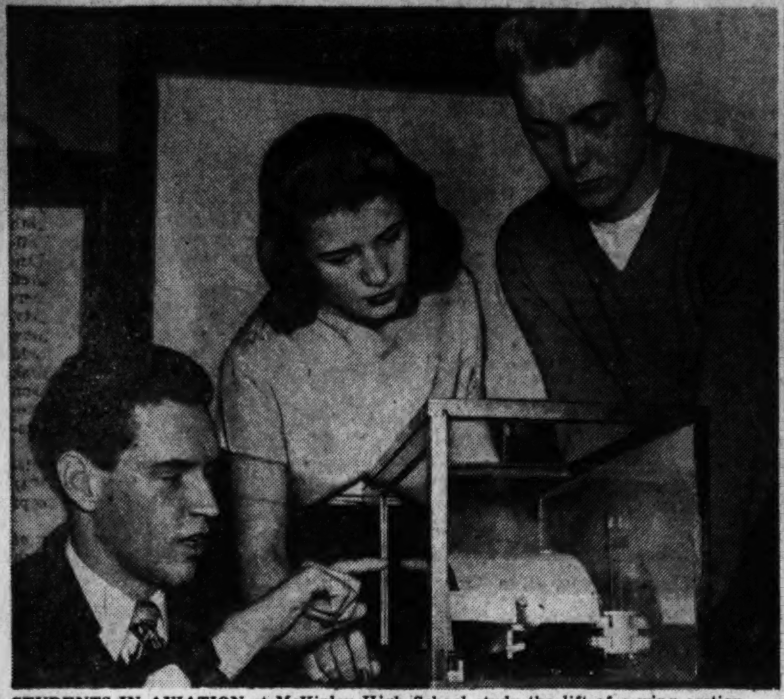
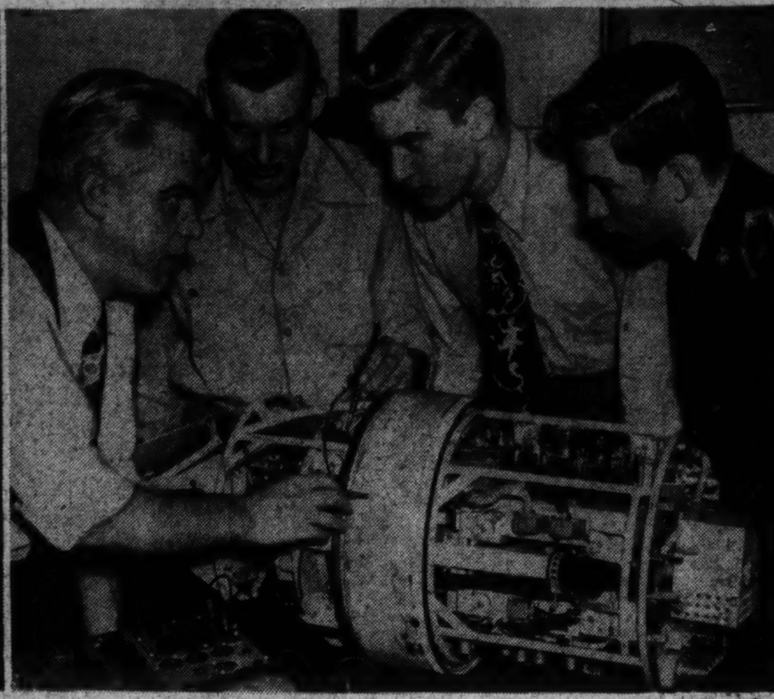
The Atomic Age Brings Changes to the Old Physics Classroom



STUDENTS IN AVIATION at McKinley High School study the lift of a wing section in a miniature wind tunnel. They are (from left) Tommy Crump, 1516 East Capitol st.; Winky Hodgkinson, 113 Rhode Island ave. ne., and Francis Chipman, 1809 Randolph st. ne. Although students are not permitted to fly as part of their school training, many fly on their own time. Crump flies with the Naval Reserve and Miss Hodgkinson takes private lessons

"B" IS FOR BOY, BUT "M" IS FOR METEOROLOGY—McKinley's aviation instructor, Jean McGregor, checks a psychrometer reading made by Charles Bouton, 2857 Monroe st. ne., while Fred Cox (left) of 494 Maryland ave. sw., takes a barometer reading and Leon Singleton of 4033 Twenty-second st. ne. reads a weather map. Aviation students at Tech do everything in aviation but actually learn to fly



The Washington Post

. . . AND "R" IS FOR RADAR—J. M. Harrison, radio instructor at McKinley, explains parts of an aviation radar set to three students. They are (from left) Cecil Torrence, 315 Todd pl. ne.; Sam Keller of 3031 7th st. ne., and Earl Iseman of 1817 Otis st. ne. Surplus war equipment is enabling high schools to keep pace with advances in physics

Area News in Brief

D. C. Births Fall From Record Rate

Births in the District began to decline during the first two weeks of January after reaching an all-time high of more than 28,000 in 1947, the Health Department announced yesterday.

Births totaled 1262 during the period, as compared with 1357 during the first two weeks of January last year.

There were fewer deaths (371) during the period, however, than last year (442). Deaths of babies under 1 year of age showed a decided drop from 49 last year to 19 this January, the report said.

'Cukes' Destroyed

Cucumbers topped the list of more than five tons of foodstuffs condemned and ordered destroyed here last week by Health Department food inspectors.

Dr. R. R. Ashworth, director of the Bureau of Food Inspection, said 1570 establishments were inspected and three violators taken to court, where they paid fines or forfeitures of $100.

Church Theft Charged

A 41-year-old convict was charged yesterday with stealing $418 from a church remodeling fund.

He is Walter Hill, 41, of 49 Fenton st. ne. Judge George D. Neilson of Municipal Court held Hill under $5000 bond yesterday for grand jury action when Deacon Yancey W. Dean of the Pleasant Grove Baptist Church said the money was missed soon after Hill left.

Police testified Hill confessed, saying he had now repented and wanted to join the church.

County Future Is Topic

Future development of Prince Georges County will be the topic at a dinner meeting of the Prince Georges County Chamber of Commerce at 7 p. m. at Prince Georges Golf and Country Club.

T. Howard Duckett and Curt C. Mack will be speakers.

Quartet on Air

A barbershop quartet consisting of John B. Cullen, Frank Shore, Jerry Bachman and Jack Chase will sing at 2:15 p. m. today over WBCC on a program devoted to American Legion war memorial building fund drive which continues through February 9.

Charity Unit Elects

Reelection of Stephen M. Smith of 619 S. 20th st., Arlington, to the presidency of the Catholic Charities of Northern Virginia, was announced yesterday.

Others named included John A. K. Donovan of Falls Church, vice president; Addison B. Clohosey of Alexandria, secretary, and Joseph B. Welton of Alexandria, treasurer.

Man Held in Car Theft

Clifford W. Miller, 28, was held under $500 bond yesterday for grand jury action on a charge of car theft.

Miller, who lives at 824 8th st. nw., left his wife and twin sons at the Waterloo (Md.) State Police Station after the car he was driving crashed nearby. The car, according to police, was taken from a parking lot in Washington.

Lane Sees Negro Graduate Schools Inevitable in South

Annapolis, Jan. 24 (AP).—The South will be forced to establish regional graduate schools for Negroes because it cannot afford the cost of parallel, segregated systems of higher education, Governor Lane declared yesterday.

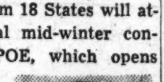
He is chairman of the Southern Governors' Conference, which is considering the possibility of using Meharry Medical College at Nashville as such a school, and Lane said it might become the pattern for higher Negro education in the South.

The plan is on the agenda for conference meeting February 7-8 in Tallahassee, Fla.

"Various States cannot afford to support duplicate facilities," Lane said in an interview. "But States financially unable to provide equal opportunities for Negroes and at the same time preserve their present policies of segregation might contribute on a cooperative basis to support of regional institutions."

Elks in 18 States To Send Delegates To Parley Here

Delegates from 18 States will attend the annual mid-winter conference of IBPOE, which opens here Thursday morning at the Metropolitan Baptist Church.



Wilson

Grand Exalted Ruler J. Finley Wilson will open the conference, which will study need for adult education in view of social, scientific and technical developments. Discussion will center around significant aspects of the Army's educational program for adults, for reduction of "functional" illiteracy.

Other subjects to be discussed during the three-day conference include dual school systems, segregated school systems and mixed school systems, the role of illiteracy in national security and status of Negro colleges, high schools and elementary schools.

Eisler Trial Delay Irks Justice Dept.

The Justice Department yesterday indicated impatience because of lack of court action in the cases of Gerhart Eisler, Carl Aldo Marzani and Dr. Edward K. Barsky.

Eisler, alleged overseer of Communist activities in the United States, was convicted of passport fraud in District Court last August. Arguments for a new trial were heard in October by Justice James W. Morris, who took the case under advisement and has handed down no decision.

Eisler's contempt of Congress hearing is scheduled before the United States Court of Appeals next Tuesday.

Appealed Sentence, Fine

A Court of Appeals decision also is awaited in Barsky's contempt case, which was argued in November. Barsky is head of the Joint Anti-Fascist Committee and appealed a six-month sentence and $500 fine.

Marzani, former Federal employe convicted last May by District Court of falsely denying he was ever a Communist, also awaits a Court of Appeals decision. His case was argued last December. He was sentenced to one to three years.

Ten others, including Howard Fast, author, were convicted of contempt charges along with Barsky and also await decisions on appeal. They are, in addition to Fast: Jacob Auslander, Lyma R. Bradley, Marjorie Choudorov, Harry M. Justiz, Ruth Leider, James Lustig, Manuel Magara, Louis Miller and Charlotte Stern.

Sentences Suspended

Five others convicted in the same group did not appeal because their sentences were suspended. They are: Leverett Gleason, Herman Shumlin, Dr. Jesse Tolmach, Mrs. Bobie Weinstein and Mrs. Louise Kamsley.

A Justice Department spokesman, who declined use of his name, said that "as far as I know, the prosecution has asked no continuances or delays in any of the cases. We would like to know what happened to them."

Two More Named Boys Club Aides

Appointment of two additional members of the board of directors of the Prince Georges County Boys Club was announced yesterday by Smith Purdum, president.

George A. E. Rheinbold of the Cottage City Volunteer Fire Department, will represent the county firemen's association. The Rev. Raymond P. Cahill, assistant pastor of St. Jerome's Catholic Church, Hyattsville, will represent the Catholic churches of the county.

Members of the Hyattsville branch will have an obedience demonstration staged by the Capital Dog Training Club at their meeting at 7:30 p. m. Wednesday in the Hyattsville National Guard Armory. The boys also will elect officers at the meeting.

Public School Science Plans Reach Cyclotron Idea Stage

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

With the aid of surplus war equipment, the science department of the public schools is keeping pace with advances in physics.

Student work in atomic energy at present is restricted to classroom discussion, but laboratory courses are offered in electronics and aviation.

At McKinley High School, the best equipped of the local schools for science, students are working with radar and "doing everything in aviation but learning to fly."

Radar, an advanced section of the class in radio, is taught by J. M. Harrison, wartime research worker in radar at the Naval Research Laboratory.

Radar Sets Assembled

In the radio room at "Tech" are two aircraft radar sets and sections of a station radar transmitter. Students are breaking down and reassembling the sets and expect to have one of the aircraft radar sets in operation as soon as the school acquires a 400-cycle power supply unit.

"This class is as up-to-date as we can make it," Keith C. Johnson, science department head said. "Two years ago these aviation sets were the latest thing in radar and were highly secret."

Johnson, a junior high school instructor in general science and lecturer at Wilson Teachers College before the war, was made head of the department after his release from the Navy. He is a firm believer in practical training to supplement theory.

Johnson would like to have the schools equipped with a cyclotron or a betatron to let students experiment with atom smashing. Such training, he believes, is not beyond the scope of high school students.

Miss Jean McGregor, aviation instructor at Tech, is learning right along with the students. She is a licensed pilot and is building up her hours in the air.

Wings Clipped

Students, though, have their wings clipped by Board of Education regulations, which forbid them to fly as part of their high school training.

Miss McGregor teaches all phases of aviation from airplane designs, meteorology, and navigation to tearing down engines.

Posters around the classroom show cross sections of motors and planes in flight. At the rear of the room, resting on the floor, is a surplus army engine.

Students each day check weather maps and take thermometer, barometer, humidity and wind velocity readings.

They are taught aerodynamics from working models and a miniature wind tunnel and flight problems from slides developed for the civilian pilot training program.

Thieves Gather Over $300 In Series of Robberies Here

A series of robberies and pocketbook snatchings netted thieves more than $300 in cash early yesterday and late Friday, police reported.

Biggest loser was Malcolm C. Burnett of Jacksonville, Fla., who arrived in Washington from Baltimore by bus only to discover two girls he met on the bus had disappeared with his billfold containing $135, police said.

Arthur Sunderman of 913 12th st. ne., and Kenneth Ford of 914 Pennsylvania ave., were robbed at point of gun and razor by two men while walking near Sunderman's home, police said. The thieves took $26 from Sunderman and $15 from Ford, Police were looking for three youths who beat and robbed two men in the downtown area. Harry B. Strother of 1306 Rhode Island ave. nw was robbed of $10 and a watch in the 1300 block of 14th st. nw. Herbert H. Davis, 19, a sailor stationed at the Naval Receiving Station, was robbed of $23 at 10th and K sts. nw.

Two men were assaulted, but frightened away thieves with their yells before money was taken. They were James Garfield Adams, 51, of 1014 Lamont st. nw., threatened with a knife near his home, and Harold Reardon of 1616 F st. ne., yoked in an alley near the 1300 block of Trinidad ave. ne.

Mrs. Marie Walker of 1858 California st. nw., reported two men grabbed a purse containing $79 from her coat pocket while she was on a streetcar at 7th st. and Florida ave. nw. They got away, police said.

The Government would pay Maryland $20,000 for damages caused to oyster bars by Navy dredging under a bill introduced by Representative Sasscer (D., Md.).

The amount of the claim was agreed to previously by the Department of Tidewater Fisheries and the Navy. The State claim was for damages to osyter bars caused by Navy dredging in the Patuxtent and Severn Rivers since 1942.

The 20,000 figure was a compromise involving waiver of the State's claim to an additional $106,000 for "natural resources loss."

Curtail Oil, Public Told result in a saving of 5 degrees of heat or 15 per cent of the usual fuel consumption.)

Based on Mean Marks

2. Keep the heat at 70 degrees during the day, but drop it to 60 at night. This makes for healthy sleeping and saves oil, the committee said. (A widespread belief that this increases oil consumption because much oil is expended in making the house warm in the morning is incorrect, they say.)

The committee said a method of checking on how successful the conservation process is going is the "degree-days" system—a technical method now used by dealers to determine when to return to a household to refill tanks.

The method is based on the mean temperature as compared with the average temperature for the same period as computed over several decades. The supply to individual homes is then apportioned on that basis and automatic "keep-full" deliveries made accordingly. About 90 per cent of homes here are serviced in this way, committeemen said.

The committee also asked that where such automatic deliveries have been suspended, patrons should refrain from phoning for fuel until the tank is down to the one-fourth mark.

Yesterday the Weather Bureau noted that the accumulated number of "degree day units" from the beginning of the current heating season to date was 2342 or 51 per cent of the total normal "degree days" for the heating season.

However, if cold weather persists, the number of "degree days" will jump so that conservation is essential, the committee explained.

Local dealers, 90 per cent of whom are members of the fuel oil division of the Merchants & Manufacturers Association, will discuss the "stretching" campaign at a meeting in the M & M office tomorrow at 11 a. m. Suppliers have already approved it, the committee said.

At present, most dealers are meeting demands and a stockpile of 70,500 gallons of oil and 10,000 gallons of kerosene is reserved for hardship cases, Kennedy said.

Most of the emergency calls have come from customers supplied by firms dealing with one major supplier who has been unable to meet his allocations. Yesterday, however, as new supplies arrived by barge from Baltimore, the dealers involved were able to make deliveries.

The committee anxiously watched the weather yesterday with an eye toward the freezing over of shipping routes traveled by barges carrying oil to six major suppliers. Kennedy said thus far they remained clear and a Coast Guard icebreaker would be summoned if the situation changed.

Only One Dealer Short Of Fuel in Alexandria

Alexandria City Manager Nicholas Colasanto said only one local oil dealer was out of stock yesterday, with 11 of his customers complaining of the fuel shortage.

Fairfax County Police Lieut. Henry McGarrity, who has been arranging fuel for needy cases, called the Fairfax situation "pretty bad." He said many complaints come through the police switchboard.

Colasanto said Alexandria hoped to join the Washington metropolitan area's committee to coordinate oil supplies on Monday. He wrote Virginia's Governor Tuck for permission.

U. S. Ruling on GSI Called 'Bypass'

By Frank Wilder
Post Reporter

Representatives Clare E. Hoffman (R., Mich.) yesterday accused the Truman Administration of bypassing the Taft-Hartley Act in its moves to settle the Government services cafeteria dispute.

Referring to Friday's Labor Department ruling that the act doesn't bar GSI from bargaining with the union, Hoffman declared in a statement:

"The question of whether GSI may bargain with Local 471 (United Cafeteria and Restaurant Workers, UPW-CIO) is not the issue. The real issue is whether the Administration can force GSI to bargain with union officials who refuse to comply with the Taft-Hartley law—union officials who do not deny they are Communists."

Schedules Hearing

On this "issue," Hoffman scheduled a hearing for 10 a. m. tomorrow by his Education and Labor Subcommittee. Last week, the committee held its first hearing on the 20-day-old strike that has affected the menus of some 80,000 Government customers in the 42 GSI cafeterias.

"What is the President trying to do?" Hoffman continued. "Sabotage the Taft-Hartley Act, which it is his sworn duty to enforce, by suggesting that it need not be used?"

GSI officials, meanwhile, said they were still studying the ruling of Labor Department Solicitor William S. Tyson. Their first reaction, however, was that it would have "no effect" on their position, which was restated yesterday by J. C. Niehuss, GSI personnel manager:

"There'll be no settlement with Local 471, unless it can prove it represents our present employes."

GSI has hired about 1300 new employes, it says, to replace a like number of union members on strike. But the GSI stand that precipitated the strike January 5 was its insistence that the union file non-Communist affidavits before contract negotiations are begun. This was GSI's answer to union overtures for a new contract last November. The union sought a wage boost of 15 cents an hour.

Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach entered the controversy at White House direction last week.

Tyson's ruling pointed out that failure to file the affidavits served only to deny to the union the services of the National Labor Relations Board.

Until Every Striker Is Back

Replying to a GSI contention that it cannot legally fire its new "permanent" workers, Union President Richard A. Bancroft said over station WQQW yesterday:

"We of the union say to GSI, 'Your permanent employes are on strike.' This strike with its attendant picketing will not end until every striker is back on the job, every strikebreaker is fired and we have a union contract to guarantee decent wage and working conditions."

Summoned by the Senate subcommittee considering the Federal pay raise yesterday, Union Business Agent Oliver T. Palmer testified that the average take-home pay by GSI workers under the expired contract was $21.91.

Landlord-Tenant Court Busiest in District System With 44,089 Cases in Last Fiscal Year

By Alfred E. Lewis
Post Reporter

A widow with three children recently was saved from being evicted from her home by the cooperation of the judge in Landlord and Tenant Court and the assistance of the Red Cross.

The woman had been summoned to court because of nonpayment of rent. The judge delayed the entry of the judgment for one week so that plans could be worked out to help her.

This was one of the 167 cases on a typical day at Landlord and Tenant Court. It was the busiest court in the Municipal Court system in the fiscal year ending June 30, handling 44,089 cases. The next busiest court was the District Branch of the Criminal Court with 21,085 cases.

Judges Serve in Rotation

Court opens at 9:30 a. m. each day and usually runs until 3 p. m. The 10 judges of the Municipal Court generally rotate on the bench, each presiding two months.

Fifty-five per cent of the cases each day are disposed of in the first few hours. They are cases where the defendant does not answer and judgment is entered by default. The remainder of the day is taken up by hearings in contested cases.

Requests for jury trials are steadily increasing. Jury requests jumped from 42 in the fiscal year of 1942, to 715 in 1947. Just a year ago the backlog of landlord and tenant jury trials was so great that it took six months' wait for a jury trial.

The court became concerned and chief judge of the Municipal Court of Appeals, Nathan Cayton, assigned two extra judges to hear L and T jury cases to clear up the backlog.

The Municipal Court gives L and T cases priority over all other litigation in Civil Court. Litigants now can expect action within two weeks at the most.

Seven Chief Trouble Points

There are seven main reasons why landlords and tenants come to court.

1. Misunderstandings: Cases involving confusion concerning the landlord-tenant relationship, of disputes about the rent.

2. Repairs: Disputes about a tenant's request for repairs.

3. Marital problems: Rent unpaid because of nonsupport.

4. Illness and resulting loss of income.

5. Housing or possession suits: Where possession is desired for reasons other than nonpayment of rent. Examples: Owner wants to use premises; remodeling; violation of the contract; nuisance charge.

6. Insufficient income.

7. Budgetary problems: Failure to use available income properly.

There are many aids to both landlords and tenants within the court. On three days of the week the District Bar Association provides an attorney for indigent persons.

Social Worker Helps

Assigned to L and T Court with offices in the court building is an employe of the Board of Public Welfare. Miss Doris Wilkins, a social worker connected with the board since 1934, acts as a consultant to the litigants.

Miss Wilkins is in effect a clearing agent for almost all litigants in L and T court. Knowing all social agencies in the District, she has been able to help many a needy tenant on the point of being evicted.

Most cases other than nonpayment of rent cases come within the Emergency Rent Act. Notice must be given the rent administrator when suit is filed. In the case where a serviceman is involved, the court may stay eviction proceedings for as long as three months.

This is the procedure for the filing of a complaint: The litigant comes to the court, where he fills in a paper showing the nature of the complaint. He pays the clerk 50 cents for filing the complaint and 50 cents as a fee to the United States marshal who will have to notify the defendant. The clerk then sets a date for the hearing, usually within two weeks.

Blizzard Hits City Traffic

terday, with one lone small craft taking off at 9:30 a. m. The airport reported, however, it was available for landing craft, with visibility slightly above the minimum and the runways cleared by snowplows.

Snow began to fall at daylight, when the temperature was around 10 degrees in the city and scarcely above zero in the suburbs. It piled up constantly till noon, when increasing winds set it to drifting.

By nightfall, some secondary roads in Virginia and Maryland were impassable and one-way traffic was reported on many of those States' primary roads in drifted areas. Route 1 South was reported "very bad" below Alexandria, and Route 50 through Virginia termed "even worse."

The storm, which hit New York at noon, was expected to pile up another 14 inches on that already belabored city which had just about shaken itself free from the more than 24-inch fall of December 26. Pennsylvania had two snowstorms, one driving in from the West and the other hitting the Philadelphia area from the south. The two were not expected to join forces, weather observers said.

Trains on Schedule Here

Train service in and out of Washington was reported operating on regular schedules. Trains from the West to New York were running as much as seven hours late.

The storm, hitting the East Coast on a week end, caused a minimum of loss to business establishments. Striking the Nation's Capital on a day when Government offices were closed meant fewer transportation headaches.

Some downtown department stores closed two hours ahead of normal closing hour to enable employes to get home before transportation bogged down.

The city, the CTC and Park Service had 150 snowplows and 1000 workmen busy clearing traffic lanes. No attempt was made during the height of the storm to remove snow, according to William A. Xanten, District superintendent in charge of snow removal.

Weatherman Caught With Glasses Down

Yesterday's snowstorm, though watched by the local forecaster from its rather insignificant start in Texas Thursday, still caught the weatherman with his binoculars reversed.

It hugged the Carolina coast closer than initially charted, he said last night in explanation of his 4 p. m. Friday prediction of cold and sunny for Saturday.

Forecasting how close to Washington such storms will come is "particularly troublesome," he said.

Kept Streets Open

"We concentrated on keeping the traffic lanes open," Xanten said.

Shortly after Major Barrett had declared the District in state of traffic emergency, police cars were alerted over the police broadcasting system to "proceed with caution, even on emergency calls."

"Motorists are urged to refrain from other than essential driving," declared Barrett in his public warning. "It is also urged that the downtown area be kept free of nonessential traffic until the streets are cleared. If people are not required to be out, they are urged to stay at home."

Mrs. Irene Green, 26, of 1110 1st st. nw., was admitted to Emergency Hospital with a possible fractured hip and shoulder injuries, after she was hit by a taxicab as she left a trolley at 7th and G sts. nw. Police said the driver was David R. Coleman, 38, of 239 O st. nw.

Child Hurt Sledding

Injured in the sledding accident was Irene Miller, 8, of 400 Hancock ave., Takoma Park. She was admitted to Washington Sanitarium with head injuries. Police said her sled struck the concrete abutment at the foot of Sherman st. at Maple ave., Takoma Park.

Helen Conklin, 49, of 614 E st. nw., suffered a back injury and possible fracture of her left elbow when she fell ascending icy steps at the YWCA, where she lives. She went to Casualty Hospital.

Others hurt in falsl and treated at city hospitals: Emergency Hospital, Marian Barnes, 41, of 927 20th st. nw., left hip injury, fell at 20th st. and Pennsylvania ave.; Beulah Ramsey, 43, of 2712 6th st. ne., fractured left wrisht, fell at 9th and F sts. ne., and Helen Clift, 36, of 2765 Woodley pl. nw., injury to forehead, fell in 2600 block of Connecticut ave. nw.

Bertha Franklin, 28, of 1410 S st. nw., a maid at Bellevue Hotel, 15 E st. nw., was sent to Casualty Hospital for treatment for exposure suffered while awaiting a streetcar near her home. Francis Harper, 16, of 405 10th st. ne., was treated at Casualty Hospital for an injured right ankle, from a fall.

At Sibley Hospital, George S. Amidon, 42, of 8003 East Capitol st., was treated for body bruises suffered in a fall.

Yesterday's snowfall in Washington was the greatest since last February 20, when 9.6 inches fell on bare ground. Temperatures then, however, dropped to only 18 degrees in contrast to yesterday's low during the snowfall of 10 degrees, and winds were higher.

Police List Streets For Coasters Only

The following streets will be blocked to vehicular traffic today to permit sledding, police announced last night. Other sections may be added later at the discretion of police precinct captains.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JANUARY 25, 1948 •••

Daniel De Luce, who succeeded Jack Guinn as AP correspondent in Hungary, is shown in chummy conversation with Hungary's Communist boss, Matyas Rakosi. But that was last July. De Luce incurred the government's official displeasure for a Christmas Day dispatch which the government did not refute

November was expulsion month in the Balkans. AP Correspondent Jack Guinn (left) was accused of "espionage" and was expelled by Hungary. New York Times Correspondent Arthur Brandel and his wife (right) were ordered expelled by Yugoslavia. The action later was rescinded in the case of Mrs. Brandel, who writes for the United Press under the byline Mary Lester, but she left with her husband. He was accused of "offensive writing"

November Was Expulsion Month in the Balkans

Censorship Tightens From Balkans to Orient

THE GLOBAL struggle for freedom of information and of the press has suffered numerous setbacks in the last six months.

Symptoms of the adverse turn were the expulsion of two United States correspondents from Hungary and Yugoslavia and growing barriers against free flow of news in the world's trouble spots. This was noted particularly in Russia's Balkan satellites.

A survey by Associated Press correspondents around the world showed a distinct trend toward making more difficult the newsman's task of getting the facts and publishing them.

These developments were recorded:

1 HUNGARY expelled Jack Guinn, Associated Press correspondent, in November, charging him with "espionage." Guinn replied that he was only doing his duty as a newsmen. The Communist-dominated Hungarian government expressed official displeasure with Guinn's successor in Budapest, Daniel De Luce, because of a Christmas Day dispatch reporting that 25,000 Soviet troops remained in Hungary more than 90 days after ratification of the peace treaty. The Budapest Foreign Office called parts of De Luce's dispatch a "gross lie" but offered no facts or figures in refutation.

2 YUGOSLAVIA expelled Arthur Brandel, New York Times correspondent, in November, charging him with "offensive writing." His wife, who wrote for the United Press under the name of Mary Lester, originally was named in the expulsion order but later was told she might remain in Yugoslavia. She departed with Brandel.

3. SOME NATIONS within the Soviet orbit, with the exceptions of Czechoslovakia and Finland, were reported inclining more and more toward the Soviet system of formal, acknowledged censorship. There is no censorship in Prague. Finland abandoned wartime censorship last October 15. Some of the other satellites profess to offer freedom for foreign correspondents but nevertheless make their work difficult.

4. NEWS-GATHERING in Palestine and the Middle East became physically more hazardous after the United Nations approved partition of the Holy Land. The British administration in Jerusalem posted a regulation against publicizing the "aims, objects, purposes or intentions" of terrorist groups, but thus far there is no censorship on outgoing dispatches. The Stern gang, most extreme group of the Jewish underground, warned correspondents January 9 that they "forfeited their privileges of immunity" if they accepted press cards from the Arab Higher Committee.

5. IN THE ORIENT, an element in the Chinese government favored resumption of censorship of foreign newsmen, but this group has been resisted successfully so far by some American-educated officials. Fear of adverse reaction in the United States has been a force. However, a source close to Chiang Kai-shek disclosed that foreign correspondents no longer will be permitted to approach his office direct for news but must deal with the government information office.

Effects of Cominform

THE YUGOSLAVIA action left the Associated Press the sole American news agency or newspaper represented in Yugoslavia by an American correspondent. Yugoslav officials have maintained there is "complete freedom of the press," but all foreign newsmen in Yugoslavia, except those from Russia and her satellites, were said to have agreed that sources of information were almost completely shut to them with the establishment of the Communist Information Bureau (Cominform) in Belgrade.

There was no change during the six months in the system of formal censorship in Russia or in the system of freedom in the United States, Britain and France. However, the Institute of Journalists, a British professional organization of 2900 working newspapermen and women, told the government last September that increasing government use of public relations officers was a trend toward "monopolistic control of official news."

Developments elsewhere in the world included:

JAPAN: Japanese officials showed they have graded correspondents according to their supposed friendliness; they especially resent criticism of Hirohito. They are trying to end direct access to government officials and force clearance of government news through an information bureau.

Access to officials of General MacArthur's headquarters was said to depend generally upon the individual concerned. However, foreign correspondents are free from censorship.

PORTUGAL: There is no acknowledged censorship on dispatches filed from Portugal to foreign news agencies, but correspondents are looked upon as suspect and in some cases as dangerous individuals. Portuguese papers are under strict censorship and may be suspended arbitrarily by the Minister of Interior. Individual newsmen can be stopped from working on any paper if what they write displeases the government.

Latins Tightening Up

PERU: For the first time in Peru's history, the Interior Ministry decreed this month that all foreign correspondents must register. Government departments were ordered to furnish information only to registered correspondents.

CHILE: The Congress last August granted the government power to set aside the constitution's free press guarantees and impose censorship for the security of the state. The government invoked censorship in a coal strike in October, censoring Communist newspapers directly and others indirectly. Dispatches going out of Chile were not censored, but news agency reporters were told that they must not publish certain strike information under penalty of government displeasure.

GUATEMALA: The government announced in September the imposition of censorship on outgoing news "to prevent the spread of false information."

ARGENTINA: There is no censorship on outgoing dispatches and no restrictions on the activities of foreign correspondents. However, the pro-government press is sensitive to criticism and sometimes singles out foreign newsmen for attack. Government-controlled unions still publish attacks on La Prensa but attempts to induce their followers to boycott it have been unsuccessful.

PHILIPPINES: Radio copy is subject to censorship by the Bureau of National Defense.

Dutch Review Cables

NETHERLANDS EAST INDIES: Press freedom has suffered since the Dutch began military operations July 20. Foreign correspondents report a feeling of being checked on and being subjected to pressure to accept the Dutch line. The only avowed censorship is on dispatches from forward areas in the fighting zone. However, all outgoing dispatches are reviewed and correspondents are sometimes called in and criticized. On the republican side, the local press is indirectly controlled through government pressure. Foreign correspondents are free to write what they please but it is often difficult to get information.

INDO-CHINA: The French administration keeps close control of information about its operations and policy toward the insurgent Viet Namese movement.

SYRIA: Premier Jamil Mardam Bey warned newspapers this month against what he called the prejudice of news agencies hired by Jewish money. He did not name the agencies.

IRAQ: The telegraph office has orders to refer to the Propaganda Director all cables suspected of endangering internal order, defaming members of the royal family or containing "fabricated stories." All leftist newspapers have been suppressed.

LEBANON: Papers printing stories which authorities consider reflect on them unfairly, may be suspended.

TURKEY: Eight Turkish newsmen were acquitted last August on charges they insulted the "moral personality" of the National Assembly in printing a critical speech by the leader of the opposition Democratic Party.

Argument in Greece

GREECE: The Greek army and the coalition cabinet disagreed in December over newspaper censorship. An army court martial questioned the editor and publisher of the Liberal Party newspaper Vima, despite an order from Premier Sophoulis, a Liberal, that the army stop questioning newsmen who criticized the army's actions.

In October, the editor of the Communist newspaper Rizospastis was sentenced to 18 months in prison for libelous attacks against Dwight P. Griswold, head of the United States aid mission.

CANADA: Observers report that newspapers are often open to suggestion by high officials. A form of censorship exists in regulations which permit customs officials to judge whether a publication is obscene or constitutes a treasonable or seditious attack on government..

NICARAGUA: There is censorship of incoming and outgoing cable news.

MEXICO: No censorship, but no newspaper attacks the administration, although all papers hit at individual officials and parts of the government.

Freedom of the press was reported unchanged in Cuba, Venezuela, Uruguay, the Netherlands, Australia and New Zealand, Egypt, Brazil, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland, Sweden, Norway and Denmark. Restrictions on the domestic press continued in Spain and occupied Germany.

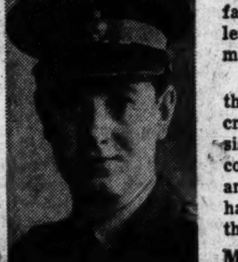
THE politician, the journalist and the commercial traveler may find in Stockholm and Copenhagen two of the most pleasant cities in the world.



EVELYN WAUGH

Stockholm, fatuously dubbed the Venice of the North, is as much like Rangoon—where in summer the low sun casts huge shadows and blinds the oncoming cyclists, where every street ends in a glitter of water, where lovely women are still undefiled by the fashions of Hollywood, where the cooks are among the best in Europe and only the waiters are vile.

Copenhagen is flat, open, clean, gay and decorous, encircled by palaces, where Italian pantomime of the time of Bomba is still played nightly in the public gardens and unique cherry brandy is distilled in the original seventeenth-century mansion of the family who guard its secret—these cities leave memories to warm the tourist through many winters of discontent.

And Oslo (poor Oslo, one is inclined to think)—all trams and shirtsleeves and ice-cream cones, noisy, inelegant youngest sister—Oslo has not the least need of our compassion. She is radiant with civic pride and rapidly completing a prodigious town hall which, inside and out, promises to be the most hideous building in the world.

Moods Born of War

VERY recent history has determined the mood of each of the Scandinavian capitals. The Norwegians are conscious of having done well in the war. They fought and suffered and conquered and in the process have been entirely cured of the inherited sense of inferiority which in the past sometimes rendered them less companionable than their neighbors.

The Swedes, by contrast, seem a weary and cynical people, the children of endemic neutrality. At first glance they seem to have attained a Socialist paradise. The state is supreme but humane; hereditary class distinctions barely exist and taxation has brought the last of diminishing returns so low that the only serious labor problem is middle class absenteeism; domestic service has been largely abolished and with it the private house.

Almost everyone in Stockholm inhabits a tiny flat; few have cars, many have sailing boats; nudists enjoy ample opportunities for their fun. Nothing except the changing of the royal guard is at all disorderly. At the universities technology is dominant; there are no debating societies but the majority of students are said to live in open concubinage.

I suppose that it was some such state as this which the English voter dimly aspired to create at the general election. And yet, even here there are signs that physical well-being is not enough. The favorite authors of the young are Kafka and Sartre; there is a low birth rate and a high suicide rate, a thriving Communist Party and the most oppressive liquor restrictions in Europe.

No Spice of Tragedy

THE war was a bitter experience for the Danes. At first they suffered humiliation without tragedy. Normal life went on; the occupying forces were discreet. Oppression developed gradually; the Resistance was in the main conservative. It produced

Ike Mails Rivals a Valentine

By Edward T. Folliard

Post Reporter

THE 1948 battle for the Presidency has at least been clarified to this extent: whoever occupies the White House after next inauguration day will be an orthodox politician, a true party man.

To millions of Americans this is not a very happy prospect. Disgusted with partisanship, they yearn for "a truly national figure, above party and faction, in the White House." In other words, they yearn for a man like Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

In removing himself "completely" from the '48 race on Friday that great soldier had something important to say to those of his countrymen who had become disillusioned with politics.

"Politics," he said, "is a profession; a serious, complicated and, in its true sense, a noble one. In the American scene I see no dearth of men fitted by training, talent, and integrity for national leadership . . ."

For these kind words President Truman and the Republicans who are after his job —Dewey, Taft, Stassen and the others— will be everlastingly grateful. They agree with Ike about politics being a profession and a "noble" one. They will still feel that way about it even when the hair-pulling and perhaps the mud-slinging gets under way later in the year.

'. . . Only to Aspirants'

GEORGE WASHINGTON, as General Ike pointed out, was the first and last American who achieved the Presidency without striving for it. Ever since then, as he said, the highest office in the land has historically and properly fallen only to aspirants."

Any man who wants to be President, he [illegible] implying, ought to be willing to get [illegible] in the cockpit of partisan politics and [illegible] for it.

Ike wasn't willing, for two reasons: (1) He felt that the "necessary and wise subordination of the military to the civil power" in the United States could best be sustained if "lifelong professional soldiers . . . abstain from seeking high political office." (2) He believed that the Presidency ought to go to a man experienced in the art of Government; i. e., a professional politician.

The fact that a man is a politician, of course, does not insure that he will be a good President. But a knowledge of politics does help. The last man to occupy the White House who was not a career politician was Herbert Hoover. Would it not have been better if he had possessed more skill in this field? Many thought so, including Hoover's own friends.

Anybody's Guess

WHAT will happen on the American political stage as a result of General Ike's exit is anybody's guess.

The cohorts of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York were sure it was a break for their man. They predicted that the one-time racketbuster would now go on to win the New Hampshire primary election and other primaries, and eventually would storm the Philadelphia convention to win the Republican nomination for a second time.

Supporters of Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio and former Gov. Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota also cheered Ike's decision.

The Stassen camp seemed to be the more genuinely happy of the two, and one Taft insider agreed that this was as it ought to be. The big Minnesotan, who was a wartime aide to Admiral William (Bull) Halsey, is heading for New England next week, and will do some missionary work in New Hampshire in advance of his test of strength there with Dewey.

A good many observers, after thinking it over, concluded that it still looked like a wide open race for the GOP nomination, with Dewey out in front, but with a strong likelihook of a Dewey-Taft deadlock.

Governor Dewey was counted on to have the best chance to capture the prize in the event of a deadlock.

ERP Backers Overestimated Public Reaction

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.

Post Reporter

OFFICIAL Washington has been wrong again in its estimate of what's on the public mind.

It thought the Marshall Plan would produce the most intense popular debate on foreign affairs since the United Nations Charter was ratified.

Now, more than seven months after Secretary Marshall first broached the idea, and more than a month after the plan itself was published, controversy over it is still subdued. The opposition is strangely tongue-tied.

One Democratic leader in Congress tried to explain it the other day by saying, "Nobody in my district's against it." A Republican leader commented: "The people don't understand it yet."

Whoever was right—and perhaps both of them were—it probably is too early to say either that the Marshall Plan has captured the imagination or aroused the hostility of the American people, insofar as "the people" make themselves articulate.

Fourth-Rate Topic

A RESPONSIBLE private citizen, whose business is to follow public attitudes on international affairs, found everywhere on a recent swing around the country a public willingness to "help Europe." But he also found the European Recovery Program ranking no better than fourth as a topic of everyday talk. Ahead of it in public interest came (1) high prices, (2) the next Republican presidential candidate and (3) "those Russians."

The questions popping up in public discussions of the Marshall Plan in the country are not often the questions that seem to be agitating Senators and Congressmen in Washington. When the plan is discussed at a businessmen's luncheon in Ohio or Indiana, the question asked most insistently is its effect on prices and costs in this country. When it is debated in a woman's discussion group, there is much talk of the alleged by-passing of the United Nations, a question that has not arisen in Congress at all.

Here in Washington, the two foreign policy committees of Congress have been holding public hearings for the past three weeks. The two subjects that crop up most often are (1) the cost of the program and (2) the method by which it should be administered.

Some Questions Listed

THE official sponsors of the program expected an outcry in Congress against spending billions of American dollars outside the United States to buy food and other supplies for Europe. The complaint has not materialized except for Senator Robert A. Taft and former President Herbert Hoover.

They expected Congress to look with fishy eye at European organization for recovery, and there were fears in the State Department that a new meeting of the 16 European nations might look to Congress like "ganging up" on the United States. Yet from the very first day of the congressional hearings there has been an astonishing volume of opinion, from Republicans and Democrats alike, that Europe should move faster in organizing for self-help.

Perhaps as the hearings in Washington continue, and as discussion grows, the popular debate will gather momentum. Meantime it is possible already to list some of the questions that seem to be troubling the American mind.

Most of the questions that follow have actually been asked, in varying form, in congressional hearings; the answers, in substance, are those that have come from sponsors of the program.

Effect on Prices

Q. WON'T it add to inflation and high prices here if we send so much to Europe this year?

A. Of course it's inflationary to ship large quantities of goods from this country. Yet total American exports to all countries in 1948 are expected to be 17 billion dollars compared to 18½ billion in 1947; imports, which tend to hold prices down, are expected to increase. In any event, the chief causes of our high prices are domestic, and can be dealt with by domestic legislation.

Repayment Method

Q. SHOULDN'T the Europeans repay us for whatever productive, money-earning goods we send them? (This question has been asked frequently by Senator Bourke Hickenlooper of Iowa).

A. It isn't just a question of repayment, but of repayment in dollars, since we don't want to be repaid in francs, lire or other European currencies. To repay in dollars the Europeans must be able to sell their goods and earn dollars abroad.

In deciding whether to give away our supplies, in free grants, or to make them repayable, in loans, the only practical criterion is the receiving country's ability to repay, and in dollars. Switzerland, Portugal and Turkey will be expected to pay cash for everything they may get from us; others of the 16 countries probably will get some help in grants and some in loans; Austria and Greece, which need machinery and other productive "capital goods" will not be in any condition to repay, and probably will get everything as free grants.

Including the 'Haves'

Q. WHY are prosperous countries like Switzerland, Sweden and Turkey included in the plan at all? (This question has been asked often by Representative Bartel Jonkman of Michigan).

A.—They are in the plan to give rather than to get. They produce materials and goods that will help the rest of Europe recover. They need certain equipment and supplies from the Western Hemisphere, however, before they can be of real help to their European neighbors. In addition, their economies must be tied in more tightly with those of the other nations, and therefore it is important to have them included.

Strategic Materials

Q. SHOULDN'T we be repaid, in part, by strategic materials, like rubber, bauxite and other minerals, which we need in our country?

A. Many European countries export these materials to earn dollars and thereby cut down their dependence on our help. If we asked Europe to give us these things in partial repayment, it would simply cost us more dollars in the end, since it would delay European recovery.

The program calls upon Europe to develop its sources of strategic materials, with our help; to give us priority in getting the materials we need, and then to sell them to us at reasonable prices.

Military Bases

Q. SHOULDN'T we get military bases from Europe as part payment? (This question has been asked of almost every witness by Senator Alexander Wiley of Wisconsin.)

A. If we did so it would confirm the Communist charge that the Marshall Plan is just a device for political and military domination of weaker countries. If we need bases, in European colonial territories or elsewhere, we can negotiate for them separately.

12 Months and 15

Q. HOW does it happen that the Administration asked Congress for just the same amount as the Europeans asked for last summer?

A. This question is based on a wrong assumption. The Administration asked less for a 15-month period than the Europeans wanted for 12 months; the Administration's request was based on November prices, which were 7½ per cent higher than the July prices on which the Europeans based their figures. If the European request were for 15 months, at November prices, it would have amounted to $8,400,000,000; the Administration cut this to $6,800,000,000.

Farm Machinery

Q. WHY should we send fertilizer and farm machinery to Europe when our own farmers can't get enough for them-

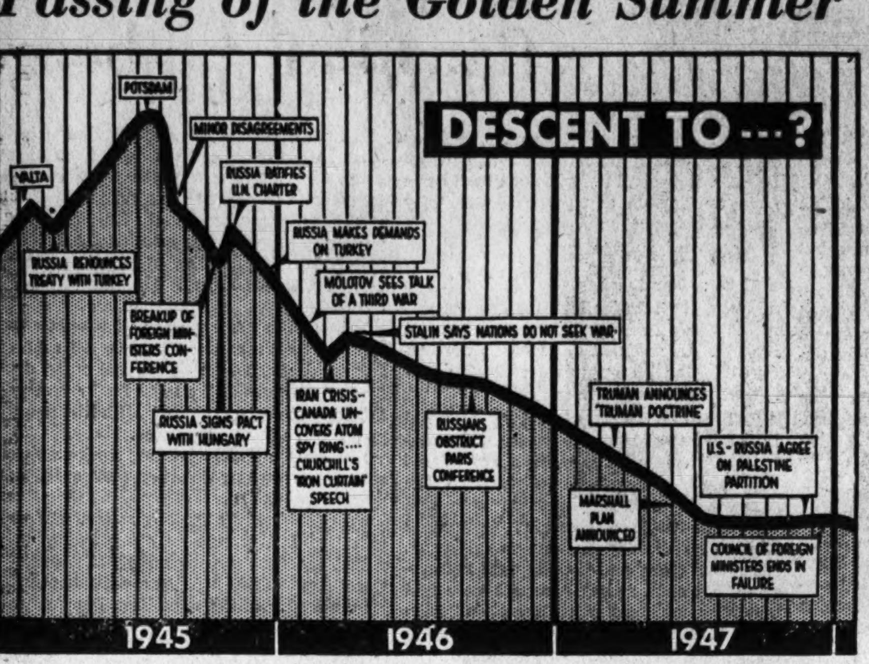
Graph First Turned Down at Yalta

Passing of the Golden Summer



By Relman Morin

IN HIS speech at Chicago some weeks ago, Secretary of State Marshall recalled the golden summer of 1945.

That was the summer of victory, of peace in Europe.

"At that time," Marshall said, "I think it was a fact that the people of the United States had as high a regard for the Soviet people and their sacrifices, and the Soviet army and its leaders, as they held for any other people in Europe.

On the former battlefields there were banquets where Russian and American generals exchanged toasts to the President and the Generalissimo, to their armies, to each other.

American GI's walked the banks of the Elbe arm in arm with Russian infantrymen.

The future was unclouded, and the heads of three nations were preparing to meet in Potsdam to fashion it.

That was the golden summer. Very little is left of it now. The "high regard for the Soviet people" has been supplanted by suspicion, hostility and fear of the Soviet government.

Premature Confidence

HOW did this come about? At what point? Over what issues?

Plotted on a graph, the course of relations between the United States and Russia would show mainly as a descending line.

Begin it at Yalta, in the winter of 1944-45. After that conference, Winston Churchill said. "I know of no other government which stands on its obligations more solidly than the Russian government."

Barely a month later, Russia suddenly renounced a 20-year-old treaty with Turkey.

Against the high excitement of impending victory in Europe, that attracted little attention. There was no hint then that the action would be a prelude to Russian pressure on Turkey, demands for joint control of the Dardanelles and territorial claims along the Black Sea—which were to be answered later by the "Truman Doctrine" of aid to Turkey.

It is now known that, within the next few months, both Churchill and President Roosevelt entertained some anxiety about Russia. Former Secretary of State James F. Byrnes now reports: "The President told me he had grave misgivings about the future." The dying President cabled Churchill, who was requesting advice, "We must be firm with the Russians."

'Solid' Foundation

BUT the descending curve was not apparent to the American people. A few realistic observers, to be sure, said that adjustments in policy between Russia and the West would be necessary after the war, but Potsdam would show as the high point on the graph.

The Big Three found themselves in apparent agreement on eight fundamental sections of the plan for postwar Europe. This was to be the foundation for the new world. The framework of it was to be erected by the Foreign Ministers Council, created at Potsdam as a permanent machine to settle the problems left by the war and created in the peace.

From the moment when the communique was issued on to this present moment, there has been a steady deterioration, interrupted only by occasional agreement on a minor point.

The line dropped swiftly after that, in 1945.

August 17.—Russia refused to discuss with other nations the fate of German war prisoners.

August 18.—Russia refused to sit on the provisional civil aviation council.

September 3.—Russia announced her intention to fortify the Kurile Islands in the Pacific.

September 19.—Russia asked to be named the sole trustee for Tripolitania, and was refused.

September 25.—Molotov attacked American policy on Japan and asked for Allied control of that country.

Design Shows Through

NONE of these events seemed profoundly significant. But a pattern began to emerge.

It entailed the consistent refusal to negotiate on common problems, the immediate beginning of a fortification plan and a drive toward the Mediterranean.

There were other minor flurries before the end of 1945.

On October 3 the London Conference of Foreign Ministers broke up without agreement. Ten days later the United States and Britain jointly protested a five-year trade treaty between Russia and Hungary. Shortly afterward, Secretary Byrnes quietly warned against "exclusive spheres" but recognized Russia's special security interests in Central and Eastern Europe.

The line moved upward slightly October 24 when Russia ratified the United Nations Charter, and when Molotov, after roundly criticizing American policy on atomic energy, nevertheless expressed confidence that the Big Three could work out the peace.

But in November there was an unopposed election in Yugoslavia, and Marshal Tito came into power. In Poland and Romania, Communist pressure was beginning to be applied to opposition parties. Foreign observers began to have misgivings about the "free elections" guaranteed by Yalta and Potsdam for those countries.

Turkey Talks Turkey

DECEMBER 21 brought another sharp drop in the line. On that day Russian newspapers—inspired by the Kremlin—demanded that Turkey hand over to Russia a strip of strategically important territory on the Black Sea. Turkey promptly replied that any attempt to alter the frontier would be opposed by force.

The year saw the end of the Moscow conference and some more broad agreements, again without any practical working details. That was one of the level spaces on the graph.

The year 1946 was one of alarms and near-disasters. Some significant dates:

January 19—Iran accused Russia of interference and demanded a United Nations investigation.

February 6—Molotov accused Britain of organizing "anti-Communist armies" in Germany. For the first known time, he asserted there was talk of "a third world war."

March 4—Canada disclosed the existence of the spy ring that obtained information about the A-bomb, and connected the Soviet embassy with it.

March 5 — Strong American protests went to Russia over Soviet actions in both Iran and Manchuria.

Churchill Analyzes

ALL THOSE events were summarized and fitted into a pattern March 5 by a dramatic and historic speech. It was delivered at Fulton, Mo., by Winston Churchill. It brought into the open what is still regarded as the goal of Russian policy. Churchill said:

"I do not believe that Soviet Russia desires war. What they desire is the fruits of war and the indefinite expansion of their power and doctrines."

Stalin immediately branded him a "warmonger." Foreign Secretary Bevin disclaimed all responsibility for the speech and offered to extend the Anglo-Russian alliance to 50 years. It was a very low point on the graph.

There was an upsurge March 22, when Stalin told Eddy Gilmore, head of the Moscow bureau of the Associated Press, "Neither the nations nor their armies are seeking another war."

From that point on, through the rest of 1946, through 1947 and up to the present, no real evidence of recovery has appeared.

The obstructionist tactics of the Russians and their satellites at the Paris conference in the late summer of '46 were the despair of the other nations. The existence of an East-West division became undeniable.

The Yugoslavs shot down an American transport airplane in the middle of the "peace conference." The United States delivered a 48-hour ultimatum demanding an apology and indemnities, which Yugoslavia met.

There were more conferences of the Foreign Ministers and they came to nothing. Greece and Turkey came under pressure from Russia, bringing on the "Truman Doctrine" of aid to them. The Russian answer was to squeeze out all opposition to the Communist Parties in Hungary, Poland and Romania and then to install Communist governments in each.

The Aloof East

THE lowest point came when the Marshall Plan was announced. The opportunity to participate in it was offered to all of Europe. Russia declined to participate, and it was no surprise when the nations in the "Eastern Bloc" came to the same decision. Czechoslovakia went through the embarrassing experience of first accepting the invitation and then declining after her leaders were summoned to Moscow.

Election Is February 4

Former IRA Leader Threatens 16-Year Rule of De Valera

DUBLIN, Jan. 24 (AP).—Flaming torches, blazing tar barrels and impassioned oratory are sweeping across Eire again in an election campaign which veteran political observers think may end tall, mystical Eamonn De Valera's 16 years of power as Prime Minister.

Shaken by defeat in two crucial by-elections last fall, De Valera called a general election for the Dail (Parliament) February 4, and even ardent government supporters privately concede there is a strong chance that the ruling Fianna Fail Party will lose its long-standing parliamentary majority.

Six parties are opposing the Fianna Fail, but the single outstanding campaign issue in this land of traditionally turbulent politics is De Valera—the American-born son of a Spanish father and Irish mother who led Ireland's revolt against British rule.

Erie was shielded from the full effects of the war by De Valera's defiant proclamation of neutrality, but Europe's postwar economic troubles have brought higher living costs, strikes for higher wages and an increasing emigration of young men and women.

EAMONN DE VALERA
. . . lost a gamble

IRA Leader Won

THESE postwar problems, coupled with the natural tendency of a government to lose supporters the longer it stays in power, culminated in Fianna Fail defeats last October and November in two of three by-elections. Before the elections, De Valera staked his government on their outcome and announced he would call a general election if he lost any of the seats.

Winner of the Dublin by-election was 44-year-old Sean MacBride, a colorful, dapper lawyer who was a leader of the Irish Republican army. Founder of the new Clann Na Poblachta (Republican) Party, MacBride is the chief threat to De Valera's supremacy. There were only two Poblachta members in the dissolved Fail but the year-old party has been growing fast.

MacBride attracted some dissatisfied Fianna Fail members by his charge that De Valera's administration had gone "stale." The defections include Hugh De Blacom, a well known Irish writer and columnist on De Valera's own newspaper, the Irish Press.

De Blacom won over many school teachers, always a strong influence in Irish public life, by support of their claims for higher wages, which resulted in an unsuccessful strike last year. Fianna Fail leaders say he also has the support of IRA extremists whom De Valera outlawed after becoming Prime Minister in 1932.

Takes to Stump

THE result has been one of the most heated campaigns in more than a decade. Friends say that 65-year-old De Valera recognizes the danger of MacBride's party splitting the Fianna Fail vote, and he has averaged four campaign speeches a day since Christmas.

In a move which De Valera's opponents called a bid for votes, the government abolished clothing rationing, which had been in effect since 1942. Price controls will remain. Coal and peat rationing was lifted several weeks ago, leaving only tea, sugar and butter on Eire's ration list. Some government sources say tea and sugar also may be derationed.

More than 400 candidates for the 147 seats in the new Dail are campaigning in the 26 counties of Eire (southern Ireland). Neither MacBride's Clann Na Poblachta nor leaders of the Fine Gael, the chief opposition party, have any hope of gaining a clear, single-party majority in the new Dail. The combined cry of the opposition is "Stop De Valera," with the intention of forming a coalition government.

The craggy-faced premier, who still carries the nickname "Dev" which he won when he quit teaching mathematics to man the barricades in the bloody 1916 rebellion, publicly said he would have no part of a coalition.

Red Issue Raised

DE VALERA'S principal vote appeal has been a plea for continuation of "stable" Fianna Fail government, holding up France and Italy as examples of uncertain coalition government.

Other government leaders have assailed the new MacBride party as "irresponsible," and Sean MacEntee, Minister of Local Government, raised a touchy issue in predominantly Catholic Ireland when he charged the Clann Na Poblachta was Communist influenced.

"Clann Na Poblachta is not a Communist organization," MacBride replied. "There is no Communist in the organization and no one who was a Communist."

MacBride has made an issue of Irish partition, assailing De Valera for not taking more active steps for reunion with the six Ulster counties of northern Ireland. De Valera also has renewed his stand for Irish union.

Another talking point of the MacBride party is opposition to De Valera's anti-inflation program, which brought higher taxes on beer, cigarettes and liquor.

Fine Gael, which held power from 1922 to 1932, is hoping to increase its representation of 28 in the last Dail. A domestic feud has split the Labor Party, but labor leaders hope that last year's transportation and bank strikes will bring them increased votes.

Father Executed

PUBLIC interest, however, is centered on De Valera and MacBride, two men whose temperaments are as far apart as the poles but whose revolutionary and political backgrounds are much alike.

The Poblachta leader is the son of an Irish major who fought the British in the Boer War and was executed for his part in the 1916 rebellion. He was a leader of the Irish Republican Army and, like De Valera, for a time refused to recognize the Free State treaty on the ground that it continued links with Britain.

If Fianna Fail loses its Dail majority, MacBride either will be the new Taoiseach (Gaelic for Prime Minister and pronounced "tea-shock") or will have a big say in his election.

The last Dail had 138 seats. The strength of the parties when the Dail was dissolved:

Fianna Fail, 77; Fine Gael, 28; Farmers, 11; Labor, 8; National Labor, 4; Independents, 8; Clann Na Poblachta, 2.

African Epic

Navy Casts 'Taming of The Shrew'

By Frank Carey

THE Navy is going hunting in Africa for a giant jumping shrew. It wants it as a laboratory aid in the fight against malaria.

This rare specimen has a body somewhat resembling a rat's—but it also has a long, elephantine snout and can hop around like a kangaroo.

It's a "giant" only as far as shrews go—about six inches long. The run-of-the-brush shrew is only mouse-length.

The Navy wants to investigate a report that the African mammal has malaria naturally. If that is so, the jumping shrew would be one of the very few mammals, other than man, subject to the disease.

The search will be only one phase of a year-long study of tropical diseases in Africa. The Navy's six-man safari, headed by Comdr. J. M. Amberson of the Medical Corps, constitutes the medical research unit of a broader expedition sponsored by the University of California. It sailed January 14.

Research to find a truly curative drug for malaria has been hampered by the fact that no completely satisfactory laboratory creature has been found. The most commonly used subject is the canary, but the form of malaria which birds get is far different from that in human beings.

The only two mammals—other than man—which the Navy knows to be subject to malaria are monkeys and vampire bats. The malaria parasites which cause the disease in these animals are also different from those which affect man.

Nevertheless, these animals have been used to some extent because they are mammals.

But both monkeys and bats have proved unsatisfactory for the final discovery of a cure, says Capt. James J. Sapero of the research division of the Navy's Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. Also, monkeys are expensive and bat colonies are difficult to maintain.

Sapero said that if it is confirmed that the jumping shrew can acquire malaria naturally, it might be possible to take blood samples from the shrew and pass on the infection to some easily procurable animal, such as the guinea pig, rat or mouse.

Attempts to make such a transfer from the monkey have not been successful. But the shrew is a little more closely related to such laboratory animals.

Shrews are related to moles and hedgehogs, but the National Museum says these jumpers are not true shrews. They are found on rocky, bushy slopes in most parts of Africa south of the Sahara.

One museum scientist said he didn't quite know how the name "shrew" popped into the language as a tag for a vexatious woman. He said Shakespeare, in his "Taming of the Shrew," may have had in mind a small European variety of shrew which makes a squeaking noise. The Encyclopedia Britannica describes a pigmy shrew found in Europe and Asia which is "pugnacious and very voracious."

Letters From a German Artist

'We Are Victims of Latent War'

By Alfred Frankenstein

FOURTEEN years ago, when Carl Hofer's painting, "The Wind," won first prize at the Carnegie International Exhibition in Pittsburgh, a grotesque situation arose which was not resolved until VE-Day. For this artist, picked for top honors in a world-wide show, was under the ban at home. The Nazis had declared him a "degenerate" painter, had relieved him of his duties as instructor at the Berlin Academy, and had forbidden him to exhibit in his native country.

Since that time comparatively little has been heard of Hofer, at least in America. For the past year and a half, however, he has been corresponding with a former pupil, the San Francisco painter, Irma Engel, and his letters, from which Mrs. Engel kindly permits us to quote the following extracts, provide a vivid picture of life and thought in Germany today.

Before turning to the letters themselves, however, it is worth pointing out that Hofer is now, at the age of 69, director of the Academy of Fine Arts in Berlin, publisher of the newly established magazine, Bildene Kunst, and one of the leading spirits in the Kulturbund zur demokratischen Erneuerung Deutschlands, a name which seems to mean Cultural Society for the Democratic Revival of Germany.

MRS. ENGEL'S first letter from Hofer is dated June 8, 1946. In it he thanks her for a package of food, and contrasts her interest in him and his family with the lack of interest shown by others whom they had presumed to be intimate friends.

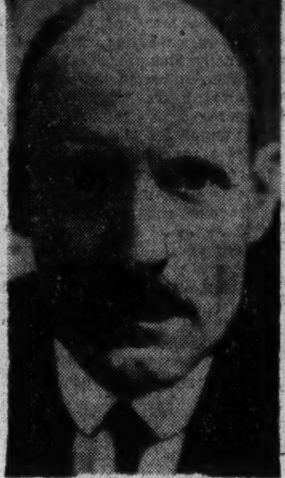
"The thesis of collective responsibility," Hofer continues, "is too easy, for it quiets the consciences of those who will not admit that thousands have sacrificed themselves in the resistance. And it seems as if those who were spared from martyrdom and death by coincidence and a kindly fate are now being reproached for their survival."

A few months later Hofer writes that he has a good-sized exhibition on the walls of a Berlin gallery, but this gives him little comfort. "Instead of clearing up, things grow darker each day, and it all begins to look hopeless. That is the worst. Germany will never rise again . . . How many iron curtains this prison has! . . . In the old days it was easier to travel from here to the interior of South America than it is to go from Berlin to Hamburg today."

November 28, 1946.

"I don't know whether I have written to you that, with my house, I lost my studio and all my works of a lifetime, but I have repainted most of them. I recently had a show of over 70 works. Americans acquired much of it."

(The above paragraph refers to the fact that Hofer's studio was burned in a bombing raid on Berlin in 1943, and the artist promptly set to work to create new versions of the most important paintings which were destroyed.)



CARL HOFER
. . . a bitter witness

March 4, 1947.

"THE URGE of the American people to assist us is very strong, and an admirable characteristic, in marked contrast to those who take everything—but everything—away . . . Thousands of Nazis are leading a carefree life in large camps and are getting fat, while decent people are dying wholesale . . . If the Allies left Germany tomorrow, there would promptly be a bloodbath, and the criminals would immediately do to us what we, for humanitarian reasons, have not done to them . . .

"You are painting tulips and hyacinths in a pleasant climate. Here everything is under the spell of inexorable cold and starvation. The paralyzing hopelessness, together with the spread of criminality caused by hunger, covers this poor land like the lid of a coffin. Two nights ago my beloved son was murdered in the street. Such things happen every day and every night. I am very unhappy. I have lost all that connects me with my past life. And now my son, too, has gone."

April 24, 1947.

"Spring was six weeks late in coming and is without warmth—and this after the worst winter within the memory of man, with thousands dying of hunger and cold. You write so touchingly and naively that we can soon go out into the woods and enjoy the spring. Ah, my dear, there are no woods near Berlin any more. The Tiergarten has disappeared, chopped down, completely gone. We get no coal; we must pay reparations, and we have to suffer for what the Nazis did to others as well as to ourselves. So the forests are being burned to give heat, and the coming winter will therefore be worse than this one, for then there will not even be any wood left . . .

"And you think we can go out on excursions, as in the romantic days of Goethe! Today you run the risk of being knocked down and robbed of your shirt if you leave your house. In certain districts workers are returned to their homes under police protection. People who have picked up a little food in the country and are riding home with it are often pulled off the cars by armed bandits.

"I don't know if I told you that my son was shot to death by burglars on the night of March 3. For 20 days he could not be buried, there were so many frozen and starved ahead of him. Now for all that we have one compensation—we may fill out questionnaires as long and wide as bedsheets. And when we are hungry, we may go to the marvelous clubs, heated beautifully with gas, and admire the menus. And we may not complain of the catastrophic inaction caused by indifference. We cannot complain because we earned it; we have to be punished for our 12 years of suffering under the Nazis. But for all of that, the German people would long ago have starved to death without American help."

May 22, 1947

"NOW the dreadful winter has passed. How people could continue to live, day in and day out, at temperatures of 20 to 25 degrees, without heat, without food, remains a puzzle. Naturally, thousands did lose their lives, but the wonder is that anyone survived.

"You are worried about how I take all this, which fate has dealt me. I can only say well. Nothing has ever shaken me. But one thing bitterly gnaws at me and begins to paralyze my crea-

Peron 'Not So Bad;' It's Eva and Aides

(Last of a series.)

By Ray Josephs

BUENOS AIRES (Via Montevideo), Jan. 24.—He's aged a good deal, this tall, graying militarist who runs Latin America's leading country. His energy is down, his chain smoking up. But Juan D. Peron is still the key personality in Argentina.

He is the face on the poster hung everywhere, the voice on the radio, the center of every debate. And he is the man whose activities affect every Argentine's everyday life—and the lives of an increasing number of Latin neighbors.

Yet a move is already developing to preserve Peron and throw some of his top aides to the wolves because "the Leader's" vast plans for making Argentina the top power of the Southern Hemisphere have not gone as well as expected.

Queen Regnant

MANY Argentines are saying: "He himself is not so bad. It's those people around him and particularly her." By her, they, of course, mean Dona Eva Duarte de Peron, long time mistress and since late '44 the wife of the President.

Undoubtedly No. 2 figure in Argentina, she's a mixture of political idealist, vixen and aggressive feminist who has aroused more bitterness than any woman in recent Latin history and has caused many an Argentine to say: "We don't have one dictator—but two." Even many Peronistas wish she would bow out or at least calm down.

She is not the power behind the throne, she has a throne of her own, makes her own pronouncements, operates her own secretariat, names her own appointees and profits hugely from an amazing variety of business ventures.

The need and tradition of keeping face, most observers feel, makes an open split unlikely between Peron and Evita—the diminutive by which she is popularly known. There have been frequent reports of disagreement between Peron and his top advisers, but no real clash.

Some opponents told me the top group has profited so greatly and has so much on one another that the only way of getting rid of any one would be to murder him, and that "wasn't necessary because there is still enough to go around." Others insist that the cream is getting thinner and a break may come before long.

Too Many Cooks

THE jockeying for power that goes on behind the scenes has kept the Argentine government from more substantial progress, however. In case after case it has started one way, turned another, finally gone off in all directions at once. Often ideas will be borrowed from so many sources—Mussolini's mandates and the United States Social Security regulations, to cite one instance—that after everything has been stirred together, nothing definite emerges.

Today Peron's charm seems more forced than when I first knew him in 1942. Yet it can't be called an act, because Peron is sincerely convinced he's Argentina's savior and that everyone loves him.

Eczema has broken out on both sides of his face, visible only closeup. He prefers Chesterfields to Argentine cigarettes, turns on a practiced smile for photographers and favorite guests, has become leery of foreign interviewers except en masse. He personally thought of the idea of having himself nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize; covertly encouraged a committee which plumped for the award in daily radio announcements and an extensive press campaign.

He remains an indefatigable traveler and talker; in the last 92 weeks he has given 59 broadcasts which had to be carried by every Argentine radio station, plus many more heard over single Buenos Aires and provincial outlets.

Some diplomatic observers say that Peron today shows little of the German approach which he learned at first hand on tours of duty in the Reich. "There's nothing wrong in his aims; it's simply that he is going about getting them the worst way," one told me. Opponents, on the other hand, contend that Peron exists only because Argentina's army was Nazi-trained and because he adopted Berlin ideas and improved on them.

Labor the Key

SUMMING up Peron's current status, most observers I contacted felt that he has four main supports: 1, labor; 2, army; 3, the church; 4, the Nationalists.

If Peron should lose the military, there's little doubt labor would be strong enough to keep him in power on its own. If he should lose labor, the army might very well abandon him, since a good deal of his hold on the officer corps has been based on the fact that it has realized Peron was the first militarist to obtain a grip on the key force of labor.

Peron's biggest and best organized following is in Buenos Aires and the provincial capitals. Pay increases and work reforms which have won him support can be enforced in urban manufacturing. The farmers not only often ignore Peron's decrees, but put up a counteroffensive.

In a fair and honest election—and the next balloting is scheduled for March—it is generally conceded that Peron would win. To a large extent this would be by default, because there is not any effective opposition. Peron has managed to keep his enemies divided.

I've found little talk of revolt, although some hotheads speak of the reactionary element of the army desiring to take over, either retaining Peron as a figurehead or pretending that he had decided to retire.

These elements feel that graft and inefficiency are increasing, that Evita is too prominent and that Peron's increasingly warm relations with the United States are making Argentina a stooge for Uncle Sam—which, to their minds, is the worst possible calamity.

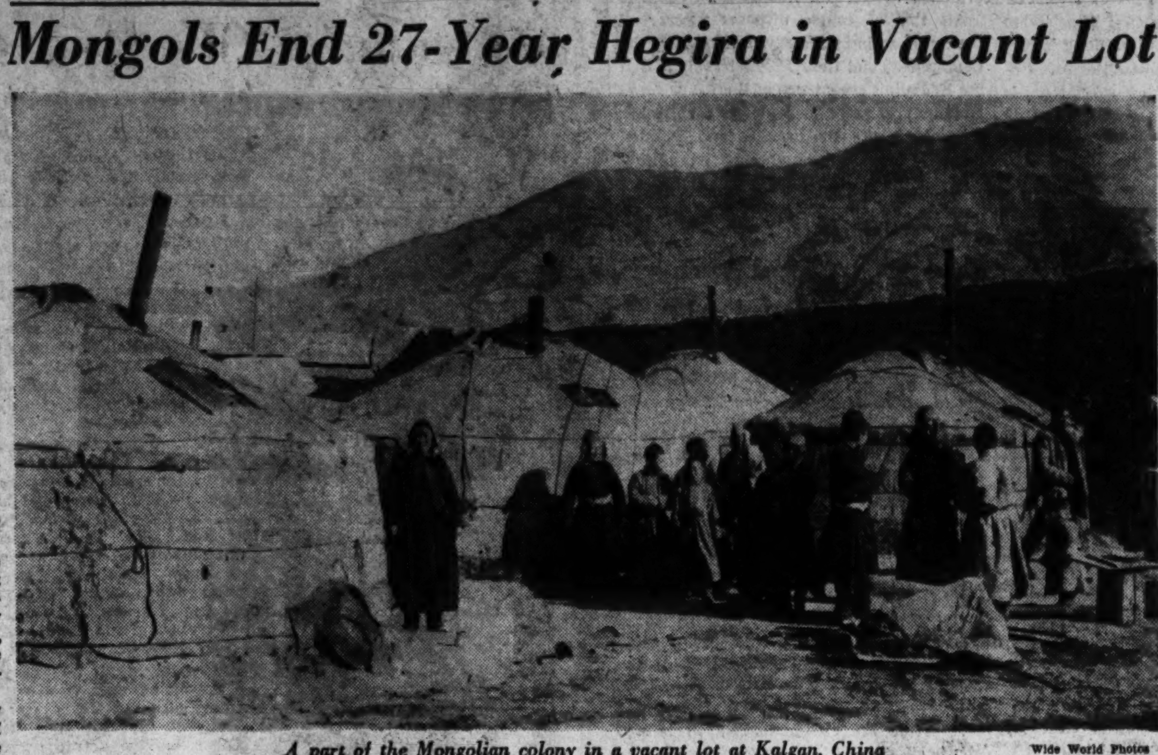
Mongols End 27-Year Hegira in Vacant Lot



A part of the Mongolian colony in a vacant lot at Kalgan, China

Wide World Photos

An aged Mongol woman outside the family tent, or yurt, which she helped to carry more than 1000 miles from Siberia

KALGAN, China, Jan. 24 (AP).—A few hundred Mongols gathered in this southern Inner Mongolian city are almost all who are left of 10,000 men, women and children who began a flight from the Communists in Siberia in 1920.

Their refuge is a vacant lot near a coal heap, their homes the felt tents or "yurts" they used to shield themselves from Siberia's bitter winters.

The yurt dwellers are the Buriat Mongols, who lived in the grasslands east of Lake Baikal, in south central Siberia.

This is the story they tell of their hegira:

When the Communists came to power in Russia, the Buriat Mongols heard the Bolsheviki were killing off princes and lamas of the Mongol tribes west of their grasslands.

They folded their felt tents and struck out for Manchuria, some 500 miles east. The Mongols settled in the Hailar region, in the northwest part of Manchuria.

Nine years later, in 1929, they found the Russian Communists upon them again. Soviet forces occupied Hailar briefly in one of the frequent border clashes of those days. Several hundred of the Mongols escaped into Inner Mongolia.

When the Russians returned to Manchuria in 1945, all those who had stayed on around Hailar decided to move out. Their goal was Inner Mongolia, but only 2000 managed to escape from Manchuria.

These 2000 joined forces with the several hundred who had escaped earlier, but they were forced to move again. This time their enemies were brother Mongols, left behind by the Russians.

Those who have reached Kalgan said they fought more than ten engagements with the Red Mongols as they moved slowly southward toward China's Great Wall. The Communist Mongols, with superior numbers and equipment, finally carried off more than half the refugees and all their livestock.

The rest were scattered to the winds in small groups. They reached the Great Wall passes in Chahar and Suiyuan Provinces just as the first snows of 1947's winter began to fall.

Loan Averted New Canadian Embargo

By Adrienne Tassler

Post Reporter

TORONTO, Jan. 24.—Canada isn't a poor country, but right now money is her prime worry.

Notwithstanding a business boom and record employment, Ottawa legislators face a maze of economic problems. How these problems are handled will be important not only to Canada but to the United States and Europe as well.

Ten days ago, without warning, the Canadian government took action on one offshoot of her financial predicament. In response to mounting demands from housewives, Ottawa planners reimposed price ceilings on meat and butter.

At the same time it was revealed that Parliament will be asked to extend the government's authority to control rents and the prices of selected commodities until March 31, 1949.

The move was closely linked with two other recent government actions—a ban on import of dozens of American commodities and the signing of new food contracts with Britain. Both sent prices higher.

Expensive Cabbage

GEORGE CHRISTENSEN, national director of the Retail Merchants Association of Canada, declared in a page one story in the Toronto Star January 7, a week before ceilings were reimposed:

"Dealers are alarmed at the continuous advance in food prices. As an illustration, very poor local cabbage is 20 cents per pound wholesale in Toronto while new crop Texas cabbage can be laid in at [illegible] cents or less per pound. We recommend lifting the embargo on United States cabbage at once."

And later it was reported from Ottawa that government officials were "alarmed at the spectacular jump in meat prices since announcement of the British contract prices . . ."

Canada's dollar problem is like that of Britain in relation to the United States. Last year she bought twice as much from the United States as she sold to her.

This disparity, in itself, is not serious. For years Canada has purchased more from the United States than it has sold. It got the extra dollars through sales to western Europe, principally the United Kingdom. Now, with Canada's European customers virtually charity cases, that dollar source is dry.

Loan Was Timely

ALREADY THE United States has felt the effects of Canada's financial doldrums. It was in mid-November that Canada, one of America's best and most prosperous customers, was forced to cut off the import of huge quantities of American goods.

It put many other commodities under a quota system and laid a sales tax on items produced in Canada from imported materials. Canadians traveling in the United States were restricted to an expenditure of $150 a year.

The first of the year Canada was formally granted the 300 million dollar loan credit the United States had promised in November. If it had not been forthcoming, Canadian Finance Minister Douglas Charles Abbott said, it would have been necessary to impose even more severe restrictions.

The original import ban had an immediate effect. Prices jumped almost overnight, and Canadians reluctantly bade adieu to American radios, refrigerators, automobiles, jewelry, fruits, candies and other items to which they had grown accustomed. And though Abbott hinted that the restrictions were temporary, some statisticians predicted that recovery would take years.

Some expected it to coincide with a brightening of Britain's economic picture. And that was not looked for until 1950, at the earliest.

Dwindling Markets

ON WHAT HAS been termed Canada's most serious problem—foreign trade—the Toronto Daily Star, in an editorial January 3, noted four chief difficulties:

1. How to achieve "something like an even balance of trade" with her neighbor to the south.
2. How to retain markets in Britain and the sterling bloc in general.
3. How to retain markets in foreign countries which have only been buying Canadian goods to the extent that Canada has been granting them credit.
4. How to sell to countries which now have developed their own industries, the manufactured goods for which they once relied upon Canada.

Canadian economists believe one answer may lie in a more highly industrialized dominion. This would enable the country to make many of the goods now only obtainable abroad—and primarily from the United States.

Last year Canadian firms spent nearly 50 per cent more on plant expansion than in 1946, and Reconstruction Minister Clarence Decatur Howe, 61-year-old, United States-born engineer, was given broad powers to speed exploitation of Canadian resources.

On the other hand, Labor Minister Humphrey Mitchell pointed out early this month, many employers are "keeping their hiring to a minimum" because the effect of the import restrictions is not yet clear.

Marshall Plan Squeeze

A PART of the picture, too, is Canada's trade relationship with Britain. The new food contracts for 1948—at prices some 15 per cent higher than last year—caused a spurt in home prices.

One major problem facing Ottawa planners, the Montreal Gazette noted, is "how Canada can fulfill her new British food contracts and also participate widely and effectively in the Marshall Plan for European recovery."

The new agreements, the publication said, "may take all of the Canadian food surplus . . . yet under the Marshall Plan Canada is being counted on by the United States to help supply several billion dollars worth of food and commodities."

10 Years of Overseas Expansion

BBC Covers Globe, in 43 Tongues

By Don Cook

LONDON, Jan. 24.—Ten years ago this month, in the uneasy dawn of the year of Munich, Mussolini's propaganda drums were beating loudly over the Middle East. The British Foreign Office, uncomfortable at the trouble being stirred up, if not awake to the real danger, was casting around for some polite way to deal with the situation.

Why not, somebody suggested, broadcast our own simple straightforward truthful news reports to the Middle East in Arabic? The British Broadcasting Corporation was consulted, an Arabic-speaking radio announcer found, and thus the overseas service of the BBC was born.

Today the British government spends no less than $17,600,000 a year on broadcasts in no fewer than 43 languages. Twenty-four hours a day the BBC general overseas service is on the air. Supplementing this, special regional programs are beamed on North America, Africa, the Pacific, the Far East, Latin America, the Near East, India, Europe and every other section of the globe at peak listening hours.

Some 40 transmitters, ranging from low-power long-wave sets picked up in Europe to 800,000-watt sets, more powerful than any others in the world, blanket the globe with BBC news, music, variety shows, dramatic features, cultural programs and talks on current affairs.

Careful Economies

FROM that first broadcast in Arabic in January, 1938, the BBC has never stopped expanding and improving its overseas service. Today, even with an economy cut of 10 per cent taking effect, the service is being shaken down and reorganized internally rather than curtailed. For example, where recordings of popular shows might be repeated twice during the week, in the future they will be carried only once on any one beam.

During the war, when the British for many months had little more than the BBC with which to fight, the overseas service of course rendered its highest service. The familiar tones of Big Ben and the dramatic "V-for-Victory" motif of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony became the signatures of the service.

These signatures are heard still today—Big Ben in particular, booming out the hours all over the world. Incidentally, only once, during the flying bomb attacks on London, has the BBC used recordings of Big Ben rather than live broadcasts from the Westminster clock tower. Recordings were used then, carefully synchronized, as a security measure because the clock tower microphone might have picked up the noise of a buzz bomb which would have given the Germans a clew as to how their aim had been.

As in the war days, the great mainstay of the overseas service is its news bulletins. In a recent month, no fewer than 104 broadcast hours a day were devoted to news or news talks, in just about any language in which anyone could listen.

At least once a week, and most frequently at least once a day, a BBC announcer in London sits down in front of the microphone and begins quietly with the words, "Here is the news," in one of the following languages: English, Afrikaans, French, Bengali, Hindustani, Marathi, Sinhalese, Tamil, Burmese, Cantonese, Dutch, Hokkien, Japanese, Kuoyu, Malaya, Siamese, Arabic, Persian, Turkish, Spanish, Portuguese, Greek, Maltese, Albanian, Bulgarian, Czech, Danish, Dumqh, Finnish, Flemish, German, Hungarian, Italian, Luxembourg patois, Norwegian, Polish, Romanian, Russian, Serbo-Croat, Slovak, Slovene and Swedish.

The staff which prepares and broadcasts this tremendous output is bigger even than the BBC staff working on purely domestic service programs. There is of course some overlap, but in fact the budget for the domestic services amounts to only about 16 million dollars a year, while the overseas services spend 17 million dollars.

The structure of the general overseas program is simple. The features of widest interest and best quality are chosen each day from the domestic side and either broadcast live or played back from recordings in a continuous round-the-clock service.

'Big Berthas'

THIS service goes out over the BBC's two "Big Bertha" transmitters which blanket the globe. They were designed to out-blast any jamming of transmission which the Germans might attempt during the war, and there is scarcely any place at any time when they cannot be heard on a good radio set.

To establish even closer touch with its audience, the BBC also produces a weekly magazine called "London Calling," which circulates throughout the world. It carries details of forthcoming programs, features on British culture and BBC artists, and reprints of talks that have been broadcast. It has a circulation of about 15,000, and is mailed from London a month ahead of program dates so that it will reach listeners in any part of the world in time to tell them what they will be hearing.

For about 2½ hours over the peak listening period the special beam transmitters supplement the general service with programs designed for listeners in the sections being beamed. These supplemental services always include extensive daily news bulletins in whatever variety of language is spoken in the area.

For North America they might include farm features, which the BBC encourages local stations in the United States and Canada to pick up and broadcast, or other such features with regional interest. They probably would include economic talks, or commentaries of very moderate, carefully balanced style.

Kremlin Heeds

TO WHAT extent are the programs listened to? This is anybody's guess, but there is no doubt that the BBC and the British government are both satisfied that they aren't wasting either time or money. One test—indeed, the most effective test in the case of Russia and other eastern European countries—is the quickness with which the BBC draws a response from Radio Moscow.

Although it is frequently the object of propaganda replies or attacks, the BBC never takes any notice of such attacks and never responds. It just goes on giving out the news. Each broadcaster writes his own script and they all hew to the same pattern of agency style, making heavy use of texts and quotations.

The Foreign Office is the final arbiter if some question of policy arises in connection with overseas broadcasts, but there is no formal liaison. Like any London newspaper reporter, the BBC simply calls the Foreign Office news section when in doubt about the official line on some diplomatic development; but, unlike reporters, they would scarcely question or criticize policy on a given matter.

Mennonites Settle Brethren in Chaco

By Frank K. Tiffany

HILLSBORO, KANS., Jan. 24 (AP).—Just a year ago a ship paused at Rotterdam, took aboard some 300 refugees, moved to Bremerhaven for nearly 2000 more, then steamed across the Atlantic to Buenos Aires on a journey to new homes in the Gran Chaco of Paraguay.

. . . welcomes positive effort

In the next three months three more ships will make the trip—two from Bremerhaven and one from Denmark—each carrying about 800 refugees for resettlement in Paraguay.

In the long view, these displaced persons are continuing the centuries-long search of the Mennonites for a homeland in which they can dwell in their frugal, religiously motivated, productive way—free of compulsion to do military service against their fellow men.

That search took them from their native Holland to Prussia, then to Russia, and now in the wake of two world conflicts to North and South America.

In more immediate terms, it is a $600,000 good deed, financed in a cooperative venture by the numerous Mennonite groups in the United States and Canada.

Negative Publicity

HERE in this small central Kansas town, a tall, gray-haired leader of the faith, 70-year-old P. C. Heibert—an educator for half a century and for 27 years chairman of the Mennonite Central Committee—sat in the living room of his home and explained:

"We Mennonites have just come through a difficult period—a war that brought us only negative publicity as conscientious objectors to combat.

"Now"—and his deeply serious expression gave way to a smile of satisfaction—"now we're having a chance to show in a positive way what we do believe, and what we can do."

It won't be easy for those 2300 European Mennonites to establish themselves in the Gran Chaco—vast, virgin inland territory long the center of bloody border disputes between Paraguay and Bolivia.

Only 444 were males over 16, 957 were women over 16 and the rest were children. Perhaps 400 of the women were widows.

They are a cross-section of the 10,000 Mennonites still traceable from the 80,000 who lived in the Ukraine before the war, Heibert explains.

Millions in Relief

THIS is only a part of the postwar ministry that in 1946 saw 40,000 Mennonite families in the United States and Canada donate 6500 tons of food and 363 tons of clothing — $3,360,000 worth — to millions of the world's needy. The 1947 program was estimated to exceed four million dollars.

Through canteens set up in bombed cities of England, in France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Malaysia and South America, American Mennonites have pursued their relief mission.

During the war, Heibert adds, the central committee spent $600,000 a year to feed and clothe Mennonite draftees "who could not accept any military service for conscience sake."

Convalescent Watson Is Still High Tariff

By V. R. Montanari

Post Reporter

FORMER Senator James E. Watson, 84-year-old Republican "grand old man," is on his feet again after a serious illness which has not changed his ability to express vigorous opinions.

Well known in his 29 years in Congress as a low-tax, high-tariff conservative who was Henry Cabot Lodge's lieutenant in the fight against League of Nations participation, he has not changed his basic views in these days of the United Nations and reciprocal tariffs.

"Europe is not going to give us anything; she's just relying on us to keep her," he said yesterday in an interview at his apartment at 1026 16th st. nw. "They think the United States should be milked like a damn cow in her stall!"

"I still feel there is no other policy for this country to pursue but the straight protective tariff," he declared. "The United States should take care of itself economically, financially and politically."

This is not to say he is against the Marshall Plan in principle, though with "reservations"—the word that made his group famous in the League of Nations fight.

"They are our brothers and fellow citizens, in a sense," he explained, "but they owe it to themselves to help themselves. The idea of keeping them is ridiculous. We must see that what we do for them insures their future prosperity and stability, and also our own commercial and financial relations."

Turning to domestic politics, Watson termed Taft "the ablest lawyer and the ablest man in the Senate." Taft "would make a great President," he added, "but he lacks what the girls call 'oomph,' and I'm for the man who can win."

A Dewey supporter in the last two Republican national conventions, Watson would not state his current preference.

As for President Truman, the former Senate floor leader has always liked him personally, he said. "There's no doubt he's a good man," he added. But he doesn't think too much of Truman's policies.

"In fact," he concluded thoughtfully, "I don't know what the hell his policies are."

Watson said he was still weak in the legs from his two months in the hospital, but that he felt much better. He hasn't had a drink of liquor for three months, he avowed.

"Doctor's orders," he explained. "He didn't give me any choice."

Dried Plasma Given Orally for Stomach Ills

CAN DRIED blood plasma—mixed with fruit juice or other fluids—be used to treat gastric ulcers, diarrhea and inflammations of the stomach and intestines?

A Government doctor, reporting on limited trials of such a mixture among inmates of a wartime prisoner-of-war camp in Europe, says he'd like to stimulate further research.

Dr. R. de Rohan Barondes of the Veterans Administration Hospital at Los Angeles, says that at one time there was quite an outbreak of gastro-intestinal disorders among inmates of the camp.

Unfortunately, there was also a shortage of medicines that could be used as alkalizers to combat acidity.

As an expedient, dried (powdered) blood plasma was administered orally. The results, said the doctor, were "interesting."

The doctor said the addition of fresh eggwhite enhanced the therapeutic effect. The plasma, he said, could be mixed with water, powdered milk and egg solutions, broth, gelatine, fruit juice or "other cool fluids as the only source of medication."

Fulcrum Of Democracy

On Monday, the Republican Steering Committee of the House will meet to decide whether it will permit the Eightieth Congress to act on proposals of Federal aid to education. Here are some stark and stubborn facts for the committee to consider: Five million youngsters between the ages of 6 and 17 are not attending schools of any kind in the United States today. There are some 10 million adults, according to the 1940 census, whose education has not gone as far as completion of the fourth grade. Half a million young men had to be rejected for military service during the war because they lacked even the rudiments of an education.

The quality of public education in the United States, moreover, has dropped deplorably. Niggardly pay scales have caused a tragic exodus from the teaching profession so that in countless communities today classes are conducted by teachers who have no qualifications for their task. Gross inequalities exist throughout the country in educational opportunity—the key to all other opportunities. More than a million children in 1939-40 attended classrooms which cost more than $4000 a year. On the other hand, more than a million attended classrooms which cost less than $500 a year. This is scarcely a democratic system of public education. The public schools, once an American pride, have been allowed to deteriorate in so many respects that rebuttressing must be undertaken if we are to avoid a colossal waste of human talent.

The inadequacies and inequalities in educational opportunity stem from want of funds. Only Federal aid can furnish the remedy. The Republican Steering Committee is committed, to be sure, to tax reduction and to a program of governmental economy. Let its members ask themselves, however, not whether we can afford to tax ourselves and spend public money for public schools, but whether, as a Nation dedicated to the concept of government by the consent of the governed, we can afford to let ignorance sap our efficiency, our productivity, our capacity to guide ourselves with intelligence in a period of unparalleled difficulty. Such economizing would be nothing more than parsimony. Education is not a luxury. It is the fulcrum of a democratic society.

Regaining Our Voice

The smooth fashion in which the foreign information bill has been forwarded to the White House is a tribute to the willingness of members of Congress to learn from hard facts. The trips which many legislators made to Europe last summer enabled them to verify at first hand the damage our interests were suffering for want of adequate presentation. Passage of the bill authorizing expansion of the program is in particular the fruition of the leadership of its sponsors, Representative Mundt and Senator Smith, who saw the need from the first. In this connection the yeoman service of William Benton, former Assistant Secretary of State in charge of the information program, should not pass unnoticed. Mr. Benton continued to work energetically for the foreign information bill after he left the Department of State, and undoubtedly his influence was reflected in the final action of Congress.

It is of course immensely encouraging to have this recognition of the significance of the battle of ideologies in which we are engaged. The lesson, however, has been costly. The most obvious cost has been to our prestige abroad. But a more subtle and even more serious loss has been what may be termed a hemorrhage of talent. The meager appropriations on which the program has been forced to operate have resulted in a two-thirds reduction in the number of American information specialists abroad. Dozens of libraries have been closed. Hundreds of trained foreign nationals employed in the various activities have been released. It would be a mistake to think that this damage can be repaired overnight or that congressional action insures immediate results.

As a matter of fact, passage of the Smith-Mundt bill is only the first of a series of hurdles. The second is of course a greatly augmented appropriation consonant with the program's enlarged scope. The third, and in many ways the most difficult, is the enormous problem of rebuilding. This involves both the regaining of confidence abroad, a task of some delicacy, and the rehiring of competent persons who have been lured away from the Government service. It is difficult to imagine an operation which demands more care in selection of personnel, for the job to be done is psychological as well as quantitative. Obviously the recruitment of specialists is a long-term proposition. It will be aided somewhat by the renewed sense of security arising from the fact that the information activities are now established as a permanent arm of foreign policy.

The more publicized facets of the program such as the Voice of America broadcasts, libraries and information services deserve to be supplemented by private enterprise in making America and American opinion known abroad. The Smith-Mundt bill also contains an important adjunct in the provision for the exchange of students, professors and specialists. This should spur the implementation of the related Fulbright Act, which until last weekend seems to have been slumbering in the State Department. All these activities must be considered together as essential means for the achievement of our foreign policy.

End Of A Friendship

The publication by the Department of State of the documents relating to Nazi-Soviet Relations during and after the negotiation of the Hitler-Ribbentrop pact is something less sensational than it might have been had they been published, let us say, while the Nuremberg trials were in progress, or while the dismantling of German industry was being carried out under the terms of the Potsdam agreement. The news value of the revelations was considerably blunted by the references made to the documents in Mr. Byrnes' memoir Speaking Frankly. It now appears that Mr. Byrnes' account was inaccurate in some details, especially dates.

However, Mr. Byrnes' thesis that Molotov talked himself into the war with Germany by his inopportune insistence, during his conversations with Hitler in November, 1940, on Russian interests in the Balkans and Russian claims to the Dardenelles and by his objections to the presence of German troops in Finland, is considerably strengthened by this evidence. The memoranda of the conversations do not indicate the anger and indignation which Hitler is supposed to have shown upon this occasion, but it does testify to the persistence with which Molotov pressed his points. For example:

> Molotov then came to speak of the Straits, which, referring to the Crimean War and the events of the years 1918-19, he called England's historic gateway to the Soviet Union. The situation was all the more menacing to Russia, as the British had now gained a foothold in Greece . . . Molotov asked the Fuehrer what Germany would do if Russia gave Bulgaria, that is, the independent country located closest to the Straits, a guarantee under exactly the same conditions as Germany and Italy had given one to Romania . . . As a Black Sea power Russia was entitled to such security and believed she would be able to come to an understanding with Turkey in regard thereto . . . Molotov added that Russia wanted to obtain a guarantee against an attack on the Black Sea via the Straits not on paper but "in reality" . . . The Fuehrer stated . . . that he would have to ask the Duce for his opinion.

It is also made quite plain in the subsequent documents that Moscow was prepared to accept agreement on these points, plus recognition by Germany, Italy and Japan that the oil fields in the vicinity of the Persian Gulf were "a center of Soviet aspirations," and the renunciation of Japanese rights to the coal and oil in Sakhalin, as the price of joining a Four Power Alliance to consolidate the Hitlerian New World Order.

There is nothing in Molotov's subsequent attitude to suggest that it had occurred to him that his persistence on these points, by arousing Hitler's suspicions, might bring an abrupt end to the Nazi-Soviet rapprochement, which, as Molotov had previously observed, had worked to the eminent satisfaction of both parties. Yet in his letter to Mussolini on June 21, 1941, on the eve of the attack on Russia, Hitler asserted that ever since the Nazi-Soviet partition of Poland, he had observed on the part of the Kremlin "a consistent trend, which, even if cleverly and cautiously, is reverting to the old Bolshevist tendency of the expansion of the Soviet State." Because of this tendency Hitler concluded that > if circumstances should give me me cause to employ the German air force against England, there is danger that Russia will then begin its strategy of extortion in the North and South to which I would have to yield in silence, simply from a feeling of air inferiority. It would, above all, not then be possible for me, without adequate support from an air force, to attack the Russian fortifications within the divisions stationed in the East.

In other words, Hitler, at this point, had such slight trust in Russian intentions that he considered it unsafe to continue the war against England until Russian power was destroyed, since Russia would certainly take advantage of Germany's preoccupation with such a war to extend her power along the lines indicated in the Hitler-Molotov conversations. Yet it is also clear that Hitler's decision for war on Russia came as a complete surprise and shock to the Kremlin. The Kremlin's anxiety to avoid all pretext for a German attack is shown in the dispatch from Count von Schulenberg, German Ambassador to Moscow, dated May 24, 1941. Schulenberg wrote that Russian policy > is, above all, directed at the avoidance of a conflict with Germany . . . (This) is proved by the attitude taken by the Soviet government during the last few weeks, the tone of the Soviet press, which treats all events concerned with Germany in an unobjectionable manner and the observance of trade agreements concluded with Germany.

Three weeks later Molotov earnestly assured Schulenberg that the "Soviet Union has fulfilled and intends to fulfill all the terms of the Soviet-German non-aggression pact," and that "all the rumors according to which the Soviet Union is preparing for war with Germany are false and provocative." Meanwhile, the Kremlin was frantically seeking from its agents abroad some evidence of German intentions.

All this of course disposes forever of the myth, so industriously promoted by the Communists and their fellow travelers, that the Kremlin's acceptance of the Ribbentrop-Molotov pact was a mere device for gaining time while the Red armies and Russian industry prepared for the inevitable conflict.

Third Round

The stage has been set for a third round of wage increases, with the spotlight focused on the United Automobile Workers, who are seeking wage increases of 30 cents per hour chiefly as an offset to advances in living costs since June, 1946. Furthermore, efforts to mediate wage disputes between the railroads and three operating rail unions have collapsed. The unions have ordered a strike vote to be taken early in February, making it necessary for the President to appoint a special fact-finding board whose recommendations may or may not be acceptable.

These harbingers of labor troubles ahead have created less than the usual amount of public apprehension, chiefly because of a widespread belief that both labor and management are disposed to compromise their differences this time instead of fighting it out. While the continued rise in living costs is cited to buttress union demands for large wage increases, it is a foregone conclusion that the wage increases obtained under collective bargaining agreements will not be an exact measure of the alleged extent of that rise. In the first place, estimates of living-cost changes are subject to a wide margin of error and are invariably challenged by employers. In the second place, rigid application of cost-of-living formulas would often entail heavy increases in production costs that employing industries would be unable to assume without offsetting advances in prices of their products, resulting in another boost in living costs. We believe that labor leaders have come to realize the futility of efforts to beat inflation by such means and that they will be content with lesser increases that can be more easily absorbed by employing concerns.

Another reason for hoping that wage settlements will be effected without costly strikes is the threat of repressive legislation. To be sure, Congress refused to grant President Truman's request for discretionary power to put price ceilings on selected commodities and on wages, too, whenever necessary to maintain such price ceilings. But Congress might change its mind if strikes were called to enforce inflationary demands for wage increases. The possibility of such action tends to make employers as well as unions more conciliatory. Under the circumstances, there is a chance that third-round wage increases will be moderate and will not contribute markedly to further advances in prices.

Foreign Husbands

The increase of marriages across national borders that has been attendant upon war has intensified problems of nationality and immigration. One of these is the foreign husband who cannot join his American wife. Although alien wives and wives-to-be of American men are entering this country nonquota, the immigration law requires alien husbands of American women, unless married before 1932, to enter under quota, on a quota preference basis. This means that an American woman who does not come under the GI Bill of Rights permitting entry of alien spouses, and who has married a native of a low quota country, may have to wait years before her husband is eligible to join her.

This discrimination against women probably grew out of the once prevalent assumption that when a woman marries she inevitably takes the nationality and place of residence of her husband. However, American women are now permitted by law to retain their citizenship subsequent to foreign marriages. Legislators also apparently assumed that women (but not men) needed protection from international marriages of convenience sought by those seeking entry to this country. However, a law of 1937 authorizes deportation of aliens who thus fradulently expedite their entry into the United States. Moreover, the number of marriages made by American women while abroad, as relief workers and in other civilian capacities during the war, is relatively small. Less than 2000 wives are believed to be waiting for alien husbands.

Piecemeal attempts have been made, at the insistence of women's groups, to remove discriminations in the immigration law. Amendments to the original act of 1924 have made it possible for foreign husbands of women married before 1932 to enter this country nonquota. A bill is now under study by the House Subcommittee on Immigration to permit the nonquota entry of alien husbands married since 1932 and prior to July 1, 1945. But just why a time limit should be set on alien husbands and not on alien wives is not clear. Also a Senate technical staff is studying immigration laws with a view to reporting on needed revisions. The way those laws work now inflicts an inequity upon a small group of separated families, and also discriminates against women. This calls for correction, not only because of those directly involved, but also because increasing international marriages in a socially contracting world are likely to make the problem more general.

D. C. Sales Tax

The District Commissioners have again revived the threat of a sales tax in presenting the budget for 1948-49. Their persistent advocacy of this unpopular tax pointedly emphasizes the immediate need for a form of government in the District which will permit the will of its citizens to be considered in the conduct of their municipal affairs.

The people of the District have expressed themselves in opposition to this inequitable tax in strong terms and at every opportunity for making themselves heard. They oppose the sales tax because it is a regressive tax, falling hardest on those least able to pay it. It penalizes the larger families, contrary to the effect of other types of taxes. The lower-income groups, who have to spend a larger proportion of their incomes for living expenses, pay proportionately more of such a tax in relation to their incomes than those in the higher brackets, who do not need to spend all of their income to maintain themselves and their families. Under the sales tax, such savings escape taxation. With the cost of living rising to impossible levels, the imposition of a sales tax will further reduce the standard of living of the great majority of Washington residents.

The sales tax is also difficult to administer and inefficient to impose and collect. It puts the burden of collection on the merchant, and costs time and expense, in addition to reducing the volume of sales. The problem of evasion is also greater than with other types of taxation. Higher income tax rates for those in the upper brackets could bring in greater revenue, would be a more equitable form of taxation and would be much easier to collect. A greater contribution from the Federal Government would be a more reasonable source of funds which the District needs to provide for even the present inadequate municipal services in the District.

The sooner the people of the District are allowed to choose their own government, the sooner will their desires be more respected and their best interests better served. GERTRUDE EVANS.

"Unsordid Act"

In a recent issue of The Economist, London, the proposed participation of the United States in the Marshall Plan was found deserving to be called, as much as anything would be, "the most unsordid act in history." I have nothing to submit in competition, but I am reminded of another unsordid act about a century and a half ago which was the other way around. It was the act of Great Britain in transferring to the State of Maryland a fund of Bank of England stock which the colony of Maryland had maintained during the eighteenth century for the security of its issues of paper money. The record of the transactions was published last year by the Archivist of Maryland, Mr. Morris L. Radoff, Annapolis.

The fund had been placed by the colony of Maryland in the hands of trustees in England, and after the break with England the State of Maryland laid claim to it. The trustees, who had owned property in Maryland and lost it as a result of the Revolution, also made claim to it. The British courts decided that the trustees could not use property which they held as such to indemnify themselves for losses sustained as private citizens.

Furthermore the British ministry decided that it was proper that ownership of the fund be restored to Maryland. Years elapsed before this could be done, but in 1805 the property was definitely ceded to Maryland. It amounted to about $750,000, practically all in shares of the Bank of England.

To say that the funds never really belonged to Great Britain and that their cession to America was merely a decent restitution would scarcely do the act justice. The truth is that relinquishment of the funds increased the national loss incurred by Britain with the independence of America, and that holding the funds would have diminished that loss.

But however unsordid was Britain's decision to give us back our money, its wisdom seems at the moment quite uncertain. If we in our turn decide to be unsordid, we prove the British to have been wise in being so; if we decide that being sordid is wiser, we prove that that is what they should have been. There seems to be some morals involved in the question as well as economics.

Enlightened Interest

If Aesop could have appeared on January 20 before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee after John Foster Dulles, he would have driven home that statesman's plea for the "enlightened self-interest" program of aid to Europe by merely repeating what he wrote more than 2000 years ago: "Better barley bread in peace than cake in fear." JAMES B. STEWART.

Surpluses For America

If this country has so much wealth to be throwing around the globe why don't we use it in reclaiming wasteland of several of our States—building cross-country highways, etc.

The Marshall Plan is just another gesture in the giving away of America, only this happens to be a more violent phase of the malady. If the Europeans haven't the courage and desire to maintain themselves in the kind of government they want, they deserve the kind of government which it is said they will get. Money will not do the trick. It will take effort and determination on their part.

My opinion is that Russia in reality wants the Marshall Plan to go through. It will get credit for much of these gifts, anyway. My further opinion is that by giving them money and foodstuffs needed here at home we are doing these peoples a disservice in the first place. This is particularly true in view of the lapse of time in which they should partially have recovered since the war's end. Further gifts will merely cajole them into further inactivity. England's improved situation since the loan ran out is proof of this fact. If free enterprise is our policy why not extend it to Europe?

My suggestion is, solidify the Western Hemisphere, not as a threat, but as a protection for our section of the world, and spend these "surpluses" in America, for Americans. WILLIAM B. GATES.

Speculation By Federal Employes

As a long time admirer of Washington Post editorials, I have been somewhat disappointed at their treatment of the grain speculation issue. Ordinarily The Washington Post can be counted upon to avoid snap judgments and to give careful consideration to the broader implications of matters it discusses. But when it comes to grain speculation, your reaction has been decidedly superficial. On several occasions, most recently on January 15, you expressed the opinion that any public official who is in a position where he "might" have access to "inside information" should not trade in grain futures.

Secretary Anderson has stated there is no such thing as "inside information" about Government wheat buying programs. Anyone who knows the wheat market knows that there is no inside information of any kind which can substantially affect the price of a commodity as fully publicized and broadly traded as is wheat.

Mr. Stassen no doubt had the best of intentions in recommending legislation to deny all Government servants the right to "speculate" in bonds, stocks or commodities. (I wonder why he omitted real estate.) At least he deserves credit for recognizing that bonds and stocks may be fully as speculative as commodity futures, and that "inside information" on individual securities is much more common and much more easily convertible into profit than is inside information on wheat. But since, to my knowledge, no one has ever developed an administratively feasible procedure for distinguishing between speculation and investment, it would appear that the legislation Mr. Stassen suggests, unless it were to set up arbitrary distinctions contrary to American principles, would have to take the form of an absolute prohibition against trading in bonds, stocks, commodities (or real estate) by Government employes. Presumably an exception would be made for Government bonds.

This would leave Government employes as a class, apart from all other citizens, condemned to 2½ per cent interest on the meager savings they are able to manage on Government salaries, and denied all possibility of protecting themselves against the dissipation of the value of such savings via inflation. This would indeed be a drastic concession to a "suspicion" which was groundless to begin with. Would it not be futile also? Recent trends indicate that suspicion of Government servants would soon turn up with renewed vigor on some other score.

In its editorial of January 15, The Washington Post suggests that a man "wagering large amounts of money on the fluctuations of commodity exchange is . . . not . . . free to devote his full time and attention to his public office." The fact is that the time devoted to commodity futures trading by one experienced in it may be substantially less than that which must be devoted to securities analysis by a successful securities investor. Furthermore, the implication that public officials are neglecting their duties if they devote any time or energy to the management of their savings is a direct affront to the increasing number of Government servants who are contributing vast amounts of unremunerated overtime and surrendering annual leave accumulated above the 90-day limit to insure that the public interest does not suffer from the steady decline in quantity and quality of personnel resulting from insistence on governmental economies without reduction in services demanded.

It is well known that The Washington Post is sympathetic toward a general increase in Government pay scales. But certainly you are not so sanguine as to anticipate that Government pay alone will ever be substantial enough or flexible enough to assure the average civil servant with a family a respectable living regardless of fluctuations in the general price level. Certainly the type of executive The Washington Post desires to see in top Government jobs will not be attracted permanently to Washington by a $5000 adjustment in the top pay bracket if he must forgo the right to manage his savings in accordance with his own judgment and experience.

Is it not about time for a distinguished newspaper to get to the heart of this matter and tell its readers that there is no substitute for public confidence in civil servants? So far the investigators have not turned up a single career civil servant who utilized inside information for personal profit. It would seem that the record justifies continued enjoyment by civil servants of the equal rights which are our priceless American heritage. P. F. M.

Middle East Oil And ERP

By Andre Visson

Threat of Disorder

TESTIFYING this week before the House Subcommittee on Petroleum, Secretary of Defense James Forrestal brought to the attention of the Congress and the country the importance of the oil resources of the Middle East for the defense of the United States in time of war. But he could only give a hint of the importance of these oil resources in peacetime. We must, however, become fully aware of this aspect, because if we cannot assure a sufficient flow of oil from the Middle East to the European countries during the next few years, the Marshall Plan will not only be upset, but may even be unable to function.

The petroleum import requirements of the 16 European nations participating in the Marshall Plan were estimated, for the period of July, 1948, to June 30, 1949, at 283,500,000 barrels (45,000,000 metric tons). These needs are to be covered only partly from the oil production of the Western Hemisphere. The beneficiaries of the Marshall Plan are supposed to receive from the Western Hemisphere—largely from the Caribbean—136,700,000 barrels (21,700,000 metric tons.) The remaining 146,800,000 barrels (23,300,000 metric tons) will have to come from the oil production of the Eastern Hemisphere. A small amount will come from the Dutch East Indies; but the larger part will have to come from the Near Eastern oil fields.

Should the Marshall Plan operate according to schedule, the oil requirements of the European countries are expected to increase very rapidly. European and American experts agree that the increase in oil requirements is expected to be greater than in any other raw materials for the same period of time. Recovering European industry will obviously need much more oil than it now needs. And private consumption, increasing as a result of the general recovery, will certainly be much greater than it is now.

EUROPEAN experts have estimated that by 1951 European requirements in oil will be approximately 368 million barrels (60 million metric tons) a year. Our experts have certain reservations about this figure. They wonder whether the European experts have not been a little overoptimistic on the general rhythm of the European recovery, which will have its impact on both the industrial and private consumption of oil. But they would not be surprised to see the yearly European requirement in oil settled by 1951 around 340 to 350 million barrels (55 million metric tons).

From where, then will Europe receive her oil? It is completely out of the question that we could supply her 1948 and especially her 1951 needs from Western Hemisphere production. The oil production of the Western Hemisphere in 1947 increased by 6 per cent over 1946. But even if it could be increased in 1948 by the same amount, this increase would be absorbed by our own greater needs. Our domestic needs for 1948 have been estimated at 6 million barrels a day. On the other hand, our domestic oil production is not expected to exceed 5,300,000 barrels. We shall have to cover the difference from Western Hemisphere production which in 1947 was of 6,666,000 barrels a day. But we are far from certain that our 1951 needs could be covered by Western Hemisphere production alone. It is not excluded that by 1951 we will have to cover our oil shortage by importing oil from the Middle East.

THE OIL resources of the Middle East—in Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi-Arabia, Quatar and the island of Bahrein in the Persian Gulf—can cover European requirements fourfold, provided there is order in that area. The oil resources there are estimated at more than two-fifths of the world's proved crude oil reserves. Nonetheless, in 1947, all Middle Eastern oil fields combined accounted for only 10 per cent of the world's oil production. Their exploitation had just begun. But one can realize how much easier is the exploitation of Middle Eastern than domestic oil fields by the fact that the daily production of oil in the Middle East, which amounted in 1947 to 850,000 barrels, was supplied by 199 oil wells. In the United States, in order to produce 5,300,000 barrels daily we have to keep 440,000 oil wells flowing.

European and American experts were consequently not unduly optimistic when they figured out that in 1948-49 the Middle Eastern area could furnish about 50 per cent of the oil requirements of the countries under the Marshall Plan and beginning about 1951 about 80 per cent of their increased requirements. Indeed, according to the Marshall Plan, by 1951 western Europe would get from the Western Hemisphere only high-grade oil and some special oil products. But all their requirements in crude oil will have to come from the Middle East. And this will be possible only if the present output of the Middle Eastern oil fields is not jeopardized by trouble in that area.

The first impact of the trouble in the Near East, which started after the decision to partition Palestine, was to delay the construction of the pipeline from Saudi-Arabia to the Mediterranean coast. The Syrian government has postponed the authorization to build it on its territory. Of course, oil could be brought to Europe by tankers. But a fleet of tankers will demand a greater amount of steel—now a very scarce material. And should the trouble in the Middle East not subside, even the exploitaiton of Saudi-Arabia oil would be slowed down.

This makes us realize to what extent the United States and all European beneficiaries of the Marshall Plan are directly and vitally interested in the reestablishment and maintenance of order in the Middle East.

Matter of Fact

Hoover a Godsend to ERP Foes

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

THE name of Herbert Hoover has overnight become the rallying cry of the opposition to the European Recovery Program.

The Senators and Representatives now fighting ERP have never proposed defeating the bill altogether; from the reasonably moderate Senator Taft to the strikingly immoderate Senator Brooks, they have conceded that some sort of measure with the ERP label would have to pass. Former President Hoover's prescription, for transforming ERP into a charitable commitment restricted in several crippling ways, was therefore made to the opposition's order.

There are good reasons to suspect that the ERP opposition had some advance knowledge of Hoover's letter to Senator Vandenberg. Some of his proposals closely resemble those in the Herter bill, put forward as a rival to ERP by the House leadership.

Representative Christian Herter has allowed himself to be drawn into the House Republican chieftains' plan to dilute ERP to the danger point. And there has long been a close relationship between Hoover and Herter.

Prestige Challenges Prestige

THE real point of Hoover's letter, however, is not its origin. In the House, the opposition to ERP was already bold. In the Senate, the combined prestige of Senator Vandenberg and Secretary of State Marshall had caused the opposition to adopt a kind of half-hearted guerilla tactics.

To be quite blunt about it, Senator Wherry, Senator Malone and the others gathering to fight the bill did not seem quite sure they were doing the respectable thing. Now they have Hoover's prestige to weigh against Marshall's and Vandenberg's. It has thrown over them a cloak of respectability, and given them immeasurably greater boldness and confidence.

It must be further noted that the position in Congress had sometime previously begun to deteriorate in an omnious manner. The opposition's great point of attack was the amount to be authorized for the rebuilding of Europe. It was there that the main danger lay, and now lies.

A Lesson in Whittling

AT LEAST a week before the Hoover letter, there was no secret about the opposition strategy for reducing the 6.8 billion dollar authorization for the first 15 months of ERP. They hoped to cut the authorization to a maximum of five billion dollars in the Senate. They hoped to reduce this amount to somewhere around four billion dollars in the House. They expected the House-Senate conference to set a final, compromise authorization around 4.5 billions.

And then, further cutting was to occur in the Appropriations Committees. Representative John Taber's House group was to allow 3.5 billion. Senator Styles Bridges' Senate committee was to make it 4.5 billions. And the Senate-House conference was again to compromise on four billions.

It is significant that four billion dollars was precisely the sum named by Hoover as adequate and safe for the ERP authorization. Yet, even before the Hoover letter, the Administration's own congressional checkers had begun to admit sadly the possibility that the opposition would drive its program through. Hoover has simply greatly increased a threat that was already quite black and ominous enough. Furthermore, he has added the further threat of all kinds of restrictive amendments, several of which he advocated.

No Room to Bargain

ALTOGETHER, it is time to admit that the position in Congress is very bad indeed. It may be inquired, of course, why such reductions in the amount of ERP, and limitations on its planning, will be so exceedingly grave. After all, most bills sent up to Congress receive a good deal of mauling, and the resulting compromise between legislative and executive branches generally results in some sort of workable statute.

In the present case, however, these rules do not apply. In the first place, the State Department, being terrified of Congress, began by offering the lowest possible estimate of the money needed for the job of shoring up the European ruins. Any much lower amount will produce a mere unfruitful relief program.

Secondly, there is another and far worse factor in the situation which the average Senator or Representative finds immensely difficult to understand or even imagine. The members of Congress are working up to the vote on ERP with their eyes on the folks back home. But, as a practical matter, a vote to reduce and cripple ERP will have approximately 10 times as great a political effect on Paris, France, and Rome, Italy, as in Paris, Ky., and Rome, N. Y.

Here in the United States ERP is one issue among many. Abroad, ERP is the final test of the dependability of the United States as a leader and support in the great world contest with the Soviet Union. If we seem to be a broken reed, that contest will surely be lost on the political battleground of western Europe. And we shall seem a broken reed, indeed, if ERP is mangled as planned.

Price Support vs. Common Sense

FOR a start toward describing a condition our people should understand, I quote one sentence from the budget message President Truman sent to Congress January 12:

"Agricultural prices in recent months have been at an all-time high—nearly three times the level of 1940."

Now agricultural products are food—wheat, milk and milk products, potatoes, eggs. Those that are not food are clothing—cotton and wool.

So, President Truman in that sentence of his budget message is saying that prices of food and clothing are at an all-time high. In his statement the words "agricultural prices" can with literal exactness be changed to "food and clothing prices."

Doubtless the President is glad to say "agricultural prices," for that is pleasing to farmers, who are a large group of voters. But food and clothing prices affect a much larger group, and not favorably.

A Declared Policy

IN THIS condition, what does the larger group, the citizen-consumer, think should be the policy of Government? That hardly needs to be put in words.

But what actually is the policy of the Administration? We find that formally announced by the President himself in his state of the Union message to Congress January 7. It is: "We need to continue price support for major farm commodities."

Now price support takes money, money out of the Treasury—that is, out of the taxpayers' pockets. Just how much is planned for the losses expected to be incurred by price support the coming fiscal year is set down in official figures. They are in the budget the President sent to Congress January 12.

The losses anticipated and planned for on a few of the supported commodities are:

Eggs	$28,400,000
Potatoes	33,800,000
Sweet potatoes	5,775,000
Peanuts	6,150,000
Wool	41,904,000

That the Government in the present condition—with prices of food at an all-time high, with inflation threatened and in large part already here, with stern need for reducing Government expenditures in order to avert still higher prices and inflation, and with the people straining under the burden of taxation—that in this condition the Government should pay out large amounts of money in order to keep up prices of food is so contrary to reason that comparatively few understand that it is being done.

Dollar's Trail

ANOTHER reason for lack of general understanding is that the processes of keeping up food prices are complex and vary with different commodities.

One of the processes can be grasped by following the course of a taxpayer's dollar, symbolic of a total that is more than $100,000,000 for the coming year.

The dollar is taken from the taxpayer's pocket and goes into the Treasury. From the Treasury it goes to the Agriculture Department. There a part of it is used to pay the salaries of the price keeper-uppers, the number of whom runs into thousands.

The department hears that a certain farm crop promises to be abundant, hence that the price of it may go down. Thereupon the price keeper-uppers go into action. They buy as much of the crop as may be necessary to prevent the price from going down.

It is all done with the taxpayer's dollar. But his loss of that dollar is relatively small, compared with the very large number of dollars he must pay in prices of food, made higher than they otherwise would be by the price support which his own tax dollar is used to bring about.

A Sure Winner

DIRECT purchase of this kind is only one method of price support. It is used in potatoes, eggs, peanuts and some other commodities. Another method is practiced in the case of wheat.

Last year the Agriculture Department fixed a "support price" for wheat, varying from time to time. During one period it ran about $2.10 a bushel. The department announced that it stood ready to lend this amount to any raiser of wheat. The purpose of course, was to keep wheat from being put on the market, hence prevent the price from going down.

But these "loans" had a strange stipulation. If the price of wheat dropped to the support figure, the borrower need not pay the loan; the department would take the wheat off his hands and close the transaction.

A popular saying in American humor, adapted from coin flipping, is, "Heads I win, tails you lose." The practice of the Department of Agriculture about one outcome of its loans on wheat seems to suggest a strange variation, "Heads I lose, tails you win."

Something like this goes with feature after feature of the whole policy and practice of price support. Not only is it a contradiction of economic law, it runs counter to the point of view of the common man—counter, that is, to common sense.

If the common man votes in elections, in sufficient number, something might be done about it.

Marshall Plan Q. & A.

selves?

A. Europe cannot recover without these supplies; if it does not recover, American farmers will run the risk of losing their export markets. In any case, American farmers will have five times as much fertilizer for themselves this year as they had before the war, and will have more new tractors than in almost any other year in history.

Canada's Share

Q. WHY can't Canada and Latin American help Europe themselves, instead of asking us to pay dollars to send their goods to Europe?

A. Canada and most Latin-American countries are so short of dollars that they cannot meet their essential needs. Canada has already made greater gifts and loans to Europe, in proportion to her population, than we have; Argentina has also made a credit to Italy in pesos. The Marshall Plan is based on the assumption that Canada and Latin America will themselves pay for 700 million dollars of additional help to Europe in the next 15 months.

Pruning the Price

Q. WE ALL want to help the needy, but can't we do it for three or four billion dollars instead of 6.8 billion as Secretary Marshall asked?

A. This is not just a plan to help the needy; it is a plan for recovery, so Europe won't need to be on relief after four years. If a recovery plan of this kind is cut substantially, it ceases to be a recovery plan and becomes just a prolongation of year-to-year relief.

For example, if we send less food this year, to save money, it will mean that European workers will produce less; if they produce less, Europe will not meet its production goals and will need more help from us in the future. If we send less coal, to save money, Europe will make less steel for itself, and less steel in Europe will mean fewer coal cars, less machinery and less production generally.

No Assurance

Q. HOW CAN we be sure that Europe will keep its promises and meet its goals?

A. We can't be sure, although the Europeans have said it is in their own interest to meet their commitments. In any case, the Act of Congress will provide that the continuity of our help, year after year for four years, will depend on the continuity of European efforts at self help.

Business or Policy?

WHEN it comes to the administration of the recovery program, at home and abroad, Congress has asked so many questions already that it is impossible to list them all.

There is a universal desire in Congress to have the plan administered in businesslike fashion; indeed, Senator Vandenberg has warned that unless the American people feel it is being run on sound business lines, it will be "sunk without trace."

Yet the State Department insists, and most responsible members of Congress agree, that American foreign policy must be protected. Secretary Marshall has asked for a veto power over decisions which may run counter to foreign policy. Congress is reluctant to give him such power, for fear of endangering the business efficiency of the program.

Endless variations and permutations are being suggested. At one extreme is the proposal to set up the program as a 100 per cent business enterprise, virtually independent of the executive agencies of the Government; at the other extreme is the idea, already proposed by the Budget Bureau and rejected by Secretary Marshall and the President, to make it a division of the State Department.

Senator Vandenberg is now seeking a compromise. The wrangle over administration has already diverted congressional attention from the bigger realities of the Marshall Plan; the public itself does not seem to care nearly as much as the committee hearings would show.

Yet with all the technicalities, and all the obsession with details, the committee hearings are essentially educational. If the process of education goes on for another month, the Marshall Plan may yet produce a great national debate that is worthy of its subject.

Ike Favors Rivals With A Valentine

The dark horse to whom most eyes turned after Ike pulled out was Senator Arthur Vandenberg (R., Mich.). He would almost certainly have Dewey's support if the New Yorker couldn't make the grade himself.

The news of Ike's renunciation caused whoops of joy at Democratic national headquarters in the Ring Building. Only a few days before the strategists there had noted that, in the Gallup Poll, President Truman led the whole Republican field with one exception—General Ike.

No Surprise to Some

IT SHOULD be reported that a few Democratic insiders were not surprised by Friday's announcement from the Pentagon. For a week at least, they had been saying that Ike was no longer a threat. They even went so far as to say that Ike might even wind up supporting the President.

The General might, indeed, say some things favorable to American foreign policy as conducted by President Truman and Secretary of State Marshall, with valiant help from Senator Vandenberg.

But a reading of Ike's statement will show that his political affiliations are still an engima. Nobody knows for a certainty now whether he is a Republican or a Democrat. Perhaps even he doesn't know.

Such a man's voice will carry great weight when he begins making speeches as president of Columbia University.

Neuroses From Guilt

By Alton L. Blakeslee

NEW YORK, Jan. 24 (AP).—Feelings of anxiety—something that bothered even caveman society—may often stem from guilt, says Dr. O. H. Mowrer, associate professor of psychology at Harvard.

The view that they come from guilt and social fear offers a way to treat them successfully and to get rid of the anxiety and neuroses, Dr. Mowrer said. It also would indicate that man's social and moral conscience is getting better.

Ancient and even prehistoric man probably had the psychological problem of anxiety feelings, he said. There is good reason to believe that anxiety "is the principle reason for modern man's addiction to alcohol, tobacco, other intoxicants and stimulants and to gambling and gluttony." Such things can bring some relief of the anxiety.

The use of magic, and many religious rites and practices, also seem to offer relief, he added.

Escape From Realty

FEAR is a dread of something objective, but anxiety might be defined as fear of nothing, or fear of something which the person won't admit exists, Dr. Mowrer explained. A neurosis can be thought of as behavior that reduces the anxiety, by escaping the reality of facing the cause of it. Neurotics don't know why they are anxious.

Freud's theory, Dr. Mowrer said, was that a person does something for which he is punished. This leads to an internal conflict between the impulse and the fear of being punished for it and the impulse is repressed.

But later the impulse tries to reassert itself. Threatened with its return, the person feels anxiety. This is really fear of the repressed impulse, but only the fear and not the impulse itself gets into his consciousness. He may do neurotic things to allay the anxiety.

Dr. Mowrer, in a report to the American Association for the Advancement of Science, expressed the view that the anxiety comes from acts which a person has committed, but wishes he hadn't done.

"It now appears that in most if not all neurotics the problem is to help the individual 'grow up' to the demands of his conscience, not to try to whittle down or dilute those demands," he said.

"It brings the scientific theory of anxiety into fundamental agreement with the implicit assumptions of the great religions of the world concerning anxiety; namely that it is a product not of too little self-indulgence and satisfaction, but of too much; a product not of over-restraint and inhibition, but of irresponsibility, guilt, and immaturity."

THE anxiety can be accepted as a "friendly" and helpful sign of something wrong, and treatment can be carried out so that the anxiety becomes ordinary guilt and moral fear, he continued. Realistic adjustments and new learning can then be accomplished so that the hidden fear is recognized and overcome.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Why 'The Trib' Is Backing Taft

By Drew Pearson

KEN DYKE, now vice president of the National Broadcasting Co. served for some time as press relations officer to General MacArthur. He gives this version of why Colonel McCormick of the Chicago Tribune has come out for Taft—not MacArthur.

On McCormick's recent visit to Japan, MacArthur treated him royally, had him review the troops, made him feel as if he were emperor. But when McCormick finally approached MacArthur on the question of running for President, Doug replied:

"If I do, I would prefer to make the race alone. Much as I appreciate your support it would be a great mistake for me to be branded as a McCormick candidate."

Note—Looks like Doug had political savvy after all.

American Friend

ONE man who hasn't received much credit regarding the Friendship Train, but deserves a lot, is Nicola Giulii, the Italian-American now paying his own expenses to travel through Italy and explain the idea to the Italian people.

When the Friendship Train started from Los Angeles, the Italian Embassy was asked to put a representative aboard. But because the Italian government is counting every penny, it asked Giulii, a resident of Los Angeles and an American citizen, to do the job—at his own expense.

He did—and made a big hit with everyone along the way.

As the first Friendship Train pulled into New York after a grueling eleven days which began every morning at six and ended only at midnight, I asked Giulii to fly with me to Wichita to launch the Southwest Freindship Train. Without hesitation he said yes.

After that was over, I asked him if he would go to Italy. Since he spoke Italian and had seen the food collection first hand, I wanted him to tell the story of how all walks of life contributed. Again he agreed.

And what most people don't know is that Giulii is paying his own expenses, which, twice across the American continent and twice across the Atlantic, is no small bill—all for American friendship.

Hearts and Flowers

ABOUT the only thing missing at the love feast between President Truman and brother A. F. Whitney of the railroad trainmen was a string ensemble playing soft music in the background.

When the former news butcher on the Illinois Central strode into the President's oval study, there were tears in his eyes. Just eighteen months before, Harry Truman had stood before Congress and castigated labor leader Whitney as No. 1 enemy of the Nation. At that time, Alexander Fell Whitney would have been hanged from the highest tree on the back lawn of the White House had Harry Truman been able to order it.

Time, and a presidential election year, however, can mend the raveled sleeve of bitterness. So when Al Whitney visited the President, emotion stuck out over both men like a checked suit.

"Al," the President said, "all this should never have happened."

"You're right, Mr. President," replied Whitney, "but let's not talk about the past. We're living for the present and the future."

"You know, Al," the President continued, "I haven't forgotten the very great help you gave me in my Senate race in 1940, or what you did for me at the convention in 1944."

"I know you haven't, Mr. President," said Whitney, "and I know that the Democratic Party will win another great victory in the election next November."

Also present was Democratic Party Executive Director Gael Sullivan, who mended the breach between the White House and Whitney. Sullivan went to work six months ago and never let up. Finally he got Whitney to resign from the pro-Henry Wallace Progressive Citizens of America and indorse Truman's bid for reelection.

This week Whitney told Truman he felt a third party was visionary and impractical. The railroad workers, he predicted, would vote almost solidly Democratic.

Truman told Whitney he hoped to see a good deal more of him in the coming months.

Note—Former Postmaster General Bob Hannegan and then Secretary of Commerce Henry Wallace were the only two Truman Cabinet members who opposed Truman's plan to use troops against Whitney's railroad trainmen in 1946.

Barkley Reports on France

SENATE MINORITY LEADER ALBEN BARKLEY, just back from a flying visit to his daughter, Mrs. Douglas MacArthur II, in Paris, is not worried about the fate of France—not as long as it's in the hands of Premier Robert Schumann. In a private report to a luncheon of Democratic Senators, Barkley told how Schumann has fought off the Communists on the left, the DeGaullists on the right, and strengthened the French government right down the middle.

The Senators were called together secretly by Texas' Senator Tom Connally, who wanted to hash over Marshall Plan strategy. But Barkley changed the subject when he started talking about his trip.

He assured the Senators that the Communist clenched fist is losing its grip in France, largely due to the present Premier. Yet Schumann has had to contend not only with the Communists, but the forces of Gen. Charles DeGaulle as well. He has even made bedfellows of these two opposing groups, which often join forces to attack him.

"I am impressed with that man," declared the Senator from Kentucky.

Barkley also visited several camps for displaced persons, whom he described as "fine people in a tragic state."

"These people are not a lot of flotsam and jetsam," he stressed. Many are skilled workers and have set up workshops. A large percentage come from Soviet-controlled countries and prefer living in dirty camps to returning to Russian tyranny.

The Gallup Poll:

Dewey Strength Purely Eastern

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 24.—Geographically, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey's strength as a presidential candidate comes largely from the East, while Senator Taft's appeal is more Midwestern.

General Eisenhower, who declared himself out of the race Friday, has wide popular following in all sections except, of course, the South, which is pretty solidly pro-Truman regardless of what man the GOP nominates to run against him.

Henry A. Wallace, third party candidate, gets a measure of support from nearly all sections outside the South, but on the whole does a little better on the East and West coasts than elsewhere.

The geographical strength of various possible candidates for 1948 is shown in institute "trial heat" races conducted from coast to coast. Voters in all 48 States were asked how they would vote if an election were held today with Truman on the Democratic ticket and Wallace on a third party ticket running against each of three possible GOP nominees: Governor Dewey, Senator Taft and General Eisenhower.

The national figures were reported last week. Here is the way the races shape up in the five major geographical sections of the country:

Truman-Dewey-Wallace

	Truman	Dewey	Wallace	No op.
New Eng.-Mid.Atlan.	41%	45%	9%	5%
E. Central	36	49	6	9
W. Central	45	44	5	6
South	75	19	1	5
Far West	46	38	8	8
National	46	41	7	6

Truman-Eisenhower-Wallace

	Truman	Eisen.	Wallace	No op.
New Eng.-Mid.Atlan.	35%	52%	8%	5%
E. Central	35	49	6	10
W. Central	37	50	4	9
South	69	27	1	3
Far West	39	44	7	10
National	40	47	6	7

Truman-Taft-Wallace

	Truman	Taft	Wallace	No op.
New Eng.-Mid.Atlan.	45%	33%	11%	11%
E. Central	42	35	8	15
W. Central	45	38	5	12
South	76	16	2	6
Far West	49	28	10	13
National	51	31	8	10

The figures apply to sections as a whole, not to any one individual State within a section. Further polling will be conducted at intervals during the coming months to check the trends and changes of political sentiment.

Veterans for Ike

ONE INTERESTING sidelight in the polling is the candidate preference of veterans of World War II.

The poll finds that veterans give General Eisenhower an edge over Truman, although Truman is favored in preference to Dewey or Taft.

The veteran vote follows:

VETERANS

Truman	45%
Dewey	42
Wallace	9
No opinion	4
Eisenhower	47
Truman	39%
Wallace	9
No opinion	5
Truman	54%
Taft	29
Wallace	10
No opinion	7

Recapitulation

IN ITS series of reports on the political situation, the institute has shown the following:

1. Truman leads Dewey and Taft in national popularity, but runs second to Eisenhower in the institute's trial heats.

2. Outside the South, however, Dewey runs ahead of Truman.

3. Labor union members indicate a preference for Truman over either Dewey or Taft, but give Eisenhower preference over Truman.

4. Farmers outside the South show comparatively little enthusiasm for Truman. They express a preference for Taft over Truman, as well as for Dewey or Eisenhower over Truman. With the farmers of the South added in, however, Truman leads in total farm vote.

5. The Wallace candidacy creates a real hazard for the Democrats in New York State. A poll of that State finds Wallace splitting the Democratic vote to a sufficient extent to put both Dewey and Eisenhower ahead of Truman in the trial heat.

Accent on Youth

Big Party 'Juniors' Map '48 Campaigns

RALPH E. BECKER
. . . Goal is five million

Wide World Photos

ROY G. BAKER
. . . Foe of sectionalism

The accent is on youth as the major political parties start their drives for votes in this presidential election year. Both the Young Republican and Young Democratic Clubs have outlined big programs after a wartime lull in political activities. Here, in two stories, is what the junior groups are planning in 1948.

By Alexander R. George

YOUNG Republican Clubs, preparing for "E-Day" (Election Day, November 2), are aiming for five million active members by September.

Ralph E. Becker, chairman of the Young Republican National Federation, says that is the No. 1 objective of a federation program to help put a Republican in the White House next January.

Becker estimates the federation's current membership at between 600,000 and 700,000, ranging from 14-year-old high school boys and girls to 39-year-old men and women. Young Republican Clubs are now organized in 46 States and the District of Columbia, compared with 18 States in May, 1946, when the federation held its first postwar convention.

The federation was started in 1935 but became inactive during the war. It has a permanent office at Washington headquarters of the Republican National Committee and is recognized as an official agency operating within the framework of the national committee.

Becker points out "there are some 44,000,000 persons in the 21-to-39 age group, constituting a most important part of the total potential voting strength, which at the time of the 1946 congressional elections was estimated at 91,634,472 persons."

"A large turnout of young voters would be of great value to the country," he adds. "It is of utmost importance that young people's interest in local, State and national politics be stimulated and that they be given every opportunity to participate in election campaigns at as early an age as possible."

Becker, who helped launch the Young Republican movement back in 1928, is a Port Chester, N. Y., lawyer. He spends a part of each week directing federation activities. The chairman and other officers of the federation do not receive salary.

Campaign activities of Young Republicans will include providing speakers for meetings and radio programs, holding rallies, seeing that young voters are registered and furnishing transportation for registrants and voters.

Local clubs stimulate members' interest and increase membership by holding picnics, athletic contests, dances and sleigh rides.

By Jack Rutledge

SHERMAN, TEX., Jan. 24 (AP). A million strong, the Young Democrats are expected to play an important role in the 1948 presidential election, says 33-year-old Roy G. Baker of Sherman, new national president.

"We'll ring doorbells, register voters, raise money and run errands," Baker said. "We're going to organize clubs in every one of the 48 States, and before long we'll have 10 times our present membership."

Baker said statistics show that each year eight million men and women become of voting age, but less than half of this number vote.

"We're going to get as many of them as possible to vote," Baker said. "At the same time, we'll be learning politics. Leg work is the best beginning."

One of the group's major objectives will be to try to eliminate sectionalism.

"In big things," Baker says, "we all have a common objective. If we stress that, and forget petty regional differences, we'll have a united front."

The Young Democratic Club was first tried as far back as 1912 in some States, Baker said. But it wasn't until 1932 that it was attempted on a national scale.

The first organization in Texas was formed in 1933. Baker was one of the original members and has been active ever since, climaxing his career with election to the national presidency in Cleveland last November 15.

He will serve a two-year term. He receives no salary, but expenses are paid on trips.

Baker was born in Denton, Tex. His father operated a restaurant. By the time Baker was 11 he had decided to become a lawyer and enter politics. At the age of 14 he began studying law and public speaking.

Today he has one of the largest law practices in the country.

"The biggest thing in my life right now is the Young Democratic Club. No one yet has realized the potentialities of the organization. The senior party is helping us, and training us for future leadership.

"And while we're being trained, we can do a lot of good. Like eliminating sectionalism."

Hoover is No. 1 Collector

Postman Helps Fill War Library

By Morrie Landsberg

PALO ALTO, Calif., Jan. 24 (AP). There's no telling what the next mail will bring to the Hoover Library on War, Revolution and Peace.

DR. FISHER

The library has a world-wide system of agents channeling the stuff of history into its imposing headquarters on the Stanford University campus. The No. 1 agent is former President Hoover himself.

Volunteer contributions are a big help, too. A Belgian janitor slipped to friends of the library papers which Nazi officials had ordered him to burn. A member of the Danish parliament volunteered to collect documents of the Danish underground. An American GI spotted Julius Streicher's personal file of his notorious Nazi newspaper, Der Sturmer. A New Delhi Indian forwarded a report on the Pan-Asian Congress. The library hears every once in a while from an Italian in what can be identified only as "a Russian city" for security reasons—the Italian's, that is.

A Stanford graduate in Norway knew a man who had the only two complete sets of certain posters. "One set he is giving to his government," she wrote. "The other he will turn over to the Hoover Library. He doesn't want any money; he wants two cases of Scotch." The posters are now on display here.

The Hoover Library of War, Revolution and Peace towers 285 feet over the squat buildings of Stanford University at Palo Alto, Calif.

Started in 1918

WHATEVER the postman brings, the contribution finds a place somewhere in the 285-foot high Hoover Tower which the former President dedicated June 20, 1941, to help mankind "in its yearnings for peace."

There it joins a mountain of paper and exhibits in the form of more than 30,000 Government documents, 100,000 books and pamphlets, 3000 newspapers, some 32,000 posters, a weighty collection of medals, currency and maps.

Oddly, it was inspired by the French Revolution. Mr. Hoover had read how official French documents had disappeared with the years. He started collecting official papers during his World War I relief administration service and sent them on to Stanford—being a Stanford graduate, class of '95. He still takes an active interest. Only recently he forwarded a file of Polish underground newspapers and pamphlets given to him by the exiled Polish Peasant Party leader, Stanislaw Mikolajczyk.

Other agents work in behalf of the library for a number of reasons: School ties, in the case of Stanford alumni; academic interest, in the case of professional people; and money, in the case of commercial collectors who know a good document when they see one. Desire for safekeeping in the thick-walled, carefully guarded tower probably influences official agencies to send material.

Data by Ton

THE staff, headed by Dr. Harold H. Fisher, has to arrange for such big shipments as 10,742 pounds of German films from the Nazi Cultural Institute in Madrid and documents, in wholesale quantity, from the Pan-Asiatic Toa Kenkyusho (East Asia Institute) in Tokyo, one of the places where a paid representative keeps on the lookout for material.

On the other hand, the staff never knows when volunteers will come up with something. The combination of systematic hunting and just plain luck has helped the institution acquire what it catalogues as the largest collection on micronesia and underground resistance publications.

"We're specialists in subversive literature," Dr. Fisher smiled.

The library receives a certain amount of confidential material, which goes into a "treasure room." Secrecy is still imposed on some World War I documents. Occasionally, the library receives papers marked "Do Not Open" for 20 or 25 years. Although several such collections opened after the specified time yielded no sensational state secrets, they're always of value to historians.

The public is welcome to the Hoover Tower, but on the whole this is a place for historians and researchers. Dr. Fisher, a history professor himself, believes that with the material on hand now it is possible to trace the dynamics of political evolution—to make out the ideological pattern of the future from the records of the past.

"This is a revolutionary world from every aspect," he said. "It means we have to make new approaches to peace. And the problem is more urgent than ever due to the more urgent means of devastation which have been devised."

Optimistic Realist

THE library chairman, an expert on Russia, thinks we have a "rough time ahead" in international relations. But he is "quite optimistic" about the prospects of organizing the world's manners toward each other. As he sees it, the outcome "will be some sort of procedure which will make it possible for the world to get along without war."

Dr. Fisher, in common with a good many other people, would be happier if it were possible to abbreviate the Hoover Library on War, Revolution and Peace to the Hoover Library on Peace.

6 Million Cars Still On Order

By David J. Wilkie

DETROIT, Jan. 24 (AP).—The Nation's automobile industry still has a huge backlog of unfilled orders after more than 2½ years of postwar operations.

Conservative estimates place the total of unfilled orders at close to six million, and many industry experts believe that, barring a sudden curtailment of buying power, there will be no easing in domestic demand—even in the face of almost certain additional price advances.

They also declare that if no serious materials shortages or work stoppage intervene, 1948 may top the record output of 5,358,420 cars and trucks achieved in 1929.

The industry still has on its books many orders placed as long ago as 1946; few dealers are promising delivery in less than 8 to 12 months. That's a condition that is not likely to be improved through 1948.

General Motors' several passenger car divisions are now swinging over to 1948 model production, with major changes expected only in the Cadillac and top Oldsmobile lines. Ford got into 1948 model output several weeks ago, with no major changes until it introduces 1949 models late this year or early in 1949.

Packard, Nash, Studebaker and Hudson redesigned their cars for 1948 and brought them out several weeks ago. These models generally emphasize the long flowing fender lines from headlamp to tail light that are expected to appear in many of the models still to come.

Present indications are that the much-talked-about 1949 model Ford, described by Ford officials as "completely new" in design, will be ready for the assembly lines about June 1.

The Magazine Rack

By Katharine Graham

IF EVERY other building on earth were removed by design or disaster, a new civilization could be established from the contents of the two structures which house the Library of Congress, writes Carl L. Biemiller in Holiday.

In a handsomely illustrated article, "Bank of Knowledge," Biemiller describes the growth of the library from its inception in 1800 with an appropriation of $5000 for books "necessary for Congress."

The library's war record, he thinks, is typical of the immensity and extent of its functions today. A division of special information grew into the research and analysis division of OSS. Besides furnishing information to researchers for combat forces, the staff helped new war agencies establish their own reference libraries.

Requests made of the library vary from histories of fences, locks and cheese chips to the chances of locating gold by magnetic device. The classic monetary payoff was the formula for DDT, which Biemiller says lay around the premises for 70 years hidden in the pages of a German periodical.

"BEHIND THE BLACK ROBES" of the judges lies some shocking incompetence, knavery and bungling, asserts Howard Whitman in the Woman's Home Companion. Along with our Solomons we have permitted too many incompetents in positions where they exert enormous control over lives and property, Whitman contends.

Long a trade secret, this fact is becoming apparent to an indignant public and it is up to us to act, Whitman says. He describes the Missouri plan, which he thinks is the best one for judicial selection so far tried.

A scientific test to predetermine the sex of a baby is being worked out, according to J. D. Ratcliffe in the same magazine, which test may eventually be as sure fire as pregnancy tests now available. Russian researchers started the whole thing and ours are working on it. Whether it's desirable or not is another thing, Ratcliffe notes.

An anonymous father whose baby son smothered from being put down to sleep on his face writes a scorching indictment of modern theories that encourage mothers to leave their children in this position.

TWO architectural publications go into the question of whether to build in '48. "We believe the answer is a qualified 'yes'," say the editors of Better Homes and Gardens, in spite of inflation. Building costs aren't likely to drop substantially for several years, and the trade-in value of your old house will never be higher, they argue.

In order to help you plan intelligently, suit your needs and still keep within your budget, House and Garden offers plans and photographs of several new houses, one built by an architect for $8.50 a square foot. One house, a French manor, was built here for Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins. Another super-modern one was built in Northeast Harbor, Me., for former Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. William A. M. Burden. Here are ideas galore for builders, remodelers, or those who just want to move their furniture around.

PIC takes a look at 21 of today's leaders in different fields "when they were young." Expressions on the faces range from the pleasant relaxation of Dwight D. Eisenhower to the single-minded determination of Henry R. Luce at 26, when Time was two years old and still in the red.

"A MAN WHO" . . . might be the title of Harry C. Butcher's "Why I Like Eisenhower for President" in Coronet.

Ike's ability to make the Allies work together, to bind the home and battlefronts together at the time of the strikes in this country, his consideration for and ability to get along with high and low, are mentioned by Butcher as assets for the Presidency. He's had more administrative experience than most Governors and is the "most civilian-minded officer I know," Butcher says.

"Heed That Cough," says Medical Writer Maxine Davis in Good Housekeeping. Miss Davis, possessor of one of the loudest coughs to be heard locally, lets herself out by classifying coughs that signify real trouble as opposed to "nervous" and cigarette coughs. "Don't be alarmed every time, you or your husband or your child coughs," she advises. "But never neglect a cough that persists."

Another medical article by the same writer is in McCall's this month, "Baby Needs A Doctor." It reveals the frightening statistical facts of child health in this country.

An investigation by the American Academy of Pediatrics shows so far that over 100,000 mothers a year are delivered without medical care; many hospitals are without doctors, trained nurses or rudimentary equipment, and yet have babies packed four in a bed; there are stretches of country with 10,000 or more people but only one doctor and some counties with no doctor at all; nearly 30,000,000 people live in communities which have no full time public health services; and the total budget for all medical college instruction in all phases of child care is less than $2,000,000.

Miss Davis gives reasons for this, with the Academy's suggestions for improvement.

tive power, which otherwise could not be impaired by anything: the absolute hopelessness, the realization that it gets worse from day to day, that all the phrases of democracy are only phrases, that it is business they are interested in, while the last remnant of our substance is wasted. They take everything from us which should serve us for reconstruction; reconstruction they obviously do not want. . . . A people which does not believe and hope any more, because it cannot, is doomed. But life goes on, and the will to live is a power which even the wretchedest beggar possesses."

July 26, 1947.

I do not object if some of the things I have written you are published, but I don't know how far a colonial—and as such we appear to ourselves—is allowed to express himself.

"Factories which turn out ordinary objects of daily use are being senselessly destroyed because they were once employed in making bombs. The idea that Germany should not be permitted to rise again is such nonsense, for even if it were left what little it still has, half a century would be required, at the minimum, before it could be independent. It is completely incomprehensible to us why they take away our industrial potential and then demand reparations . . . It is understandable, perhaps, as an act of revenge, but let no one abroad be under the delusion that Germany will be democratized by such methods. In view of the obvious protection of the Nazis in some parts of the western zone, they evidently do not want that, either."

September 24, 1947.

"WE EXPECT a bad winter, worse than the last one, though that is hardly imaginable, for the last one was at the border line of what a human being can endure . . . We are looking forward to darkness and cold again, and no wonder, for the dismantling of key industries continues. Factories rebuilt in 1945 are also being taken apart. The results of this policy of picking people's pockets while they sleep will not fail to appear, and do not be amazed if the reaction is already strong."

November 30, 1947.

"It is an affliction, but no one gets any packages any more and nobody knows why. Nothing, but absolutely nothing, in this country can go the way of improvement. At first we were victims of Hitler and now we are victims of a latent state of war between east and west. The censors over there do not seem to realize that we want American newspapers and publications. And yet they want to educate us."

December 10, 1947.

"I cannot and I do not want to go away. It would be a kind of cowardly desertion for the sake of external conveniences. Whoever has gone through the inner experience cannot feel at home in prosperous countries. And also we, who have fought, defended and sacrificed to the limit of possibility, have the stigma of the nefarious about us, and that is not pleasant.

"Nobody who has not gone through this hell has any right to a judgment. So I will stay to the bitter end which awaits us if insane politicians do not understand what a 10-year-old peasant boy could tell them: that you cannot milk a cow before she has milk."

Novelist Waugh Finds Scandinavia Beyond Christian Pale

its heroes and martyrs but the Danes lack, or seem to lack, that sense of a national war of liberation brought to a victorious end which characterizes the Norwegians. Their hatred of Germans is unappeased.

They are shocked by the stories of Anglo-German fraternization which reach them in distorted form from across their frontier. They do not respect what they know of American habits and resent their infiltration through films and magazines. They have a quarrel with America about Greenland.

But when all this is said they remain the most exhilarating people in Europe for the reason that they are not obsessed by politics, national or international. More civilized than the Norwegians, more humorous and imaginative than the Swedes, they are a people for whom the Englishman feels an immediate, reciprocated sympathy.

The observer in passage who seeks a quick glimpse of Danish manners should visit the Tivoli gardens. Here in summer all Copenhagen has resorted for more than a century, children and elders, bourgeois and proletarian. It is the microcosm of a happy urban community. Such a place could perhaps have prospered in London 50 years ago. Could it today?

But it is not of domestic habits that the returning traveler is today expected to give an account. There is one grim question set him: What about Russia? And it is particularly pertinent to the Scandinavian countries.

Would-Be Bridge

THE Swedes are nearest to danger and the most scared. The destruction of the Baltic states and the conquest of Finland and lands intimately associated with them impressed them more deeply than the spate of pro-Russian propaganda with which we sought to reassure them during the war. Now they see no advantage in being overrun in a third world war. Oblivious of the fact that it is usually in small countries that great wars begin, they behave like children at a party who do not wish to get involved in the rough games of the older boys.

A conservative Swede remarked to me that "I Chose Freedom" had enjoyed a record sale in Stockholm. "It is a terrible thing," he said.

"Why? Do you think it is false?"

"I know it to be quite true. But it will be a terrible thing if ill-feeling is aroused against Russia. Spiritually, of course, we belong to the West, but we must live in friendship with the East. We must be a bridge, not a rampart." I forebore to press the question which way he expected the traffic to flow on his bridge.

The Swedes keep intent watch on Finland, where Russian tactics seem to differ greatly from the normal. General Mannerheim, for example, lives unmolested as would not happen in any other of Russia's recent conquests. Finnish industry works for Russia, but industrialists enjoy considerable freedom and privilege. Swedes can easily visit friends across the border.

Have U. S. Pegged

BOTH in Norway and Sweden the Communist Party forms a vigorous minority among the dominant Socialists. In Denmark it is losing prestige among manual laborers but still attracts bohemians.

Nowhere in the world is Communist policy in doubt; nowhere does its numerical voting power indicate the feasibility of the policy. The test of any country's chance of survival is the awareness of those outside the party of the true character of the enemy. In this test both Norway and Sweden seem signally to fail.

The Swedes have made a trade agreement which makes them virtually a Russian workshop. They resent it, not because it ties them to the Soviet system but because it does so on disadvantageous terms. Their own days of imperial ambition are so remote and proved so disastrous they simply cannot conceive that anyone can be so silly as to inconvenience themselves for Glory or Power.

"Dollar diplomacy" they understand, or think they do. It seems reasonable enough to want money and they are easily convinced that America has sinister designs in her philanthropy. But the conception of a cosmic order to be imposed for its own sake and at all costs is meaningless to them.

They believe very firmly in their own sanity. The word "mad" is often on their lips, applied to individuals and peoples. They cover, by this general charge, most of the motive forces which, history shows, have in fact proved most potent for good and ill.

The tiny populations of Scandinavia can never hope to oppose aggression with physical force. If they are to survive, it must be through spiritual strength, and there, alas, for all their charm and good humor and good sense they are woefully enfeebled.

Century of Apostasy

WHEN my friend said that "spiritually" he belonged to the West, he meant, I am afraid, almost nothing except that he spoke perfect English, for Scandinavia has in the last century suffered a vast apostasy and no longer forms part of Christendom.

Foreign readers of Mass Observation's Puzzled People might be tempted to declare this of England also, but that penetrating and highly significant enquiry was made solely among Englishmen and women who had been educated by the state.

The report gave a devastating picture of the results of the system which the politicans seek to make universal; but there is in England a small but still influential body who had the good fortune to spend their formative years at the public schools and other universities which are permeated by traditional Christianity.

No such society exists in Scandinavia. They are secularized from infancy by the omnicompetent state and as a result are unique in history in having no religion at all. A few eloquent pastors can attract congregations; Dr. Buchman's "Oxford" group has its adherents and, indeed, publishes a handsome magazine in Oslo.

Each of the larger cities has a very small, very devout Catholic community, but—for the vast majority of Scandinavians and in particular for the "intellectuals" throughout the West who are now turning to formal Christianity in a degree unknown since the Renaissance—the religious conception of life, or man existing in relation to his Creator, of the world existing in relation to Heaven and Hell, is totally and, humanly speaking, irretrievably lost.

A Subhuman Zoo

TO FIND an expression of Scandinavian piety the seeker must visit Frogner Park in Oslo, where he will find a monument unique in Europe. Nearly 20 years ago the Oslo municipality decided that in Gustav Vigeland they had a genious comparable to Michelangelo. He was indeed a sculptor of high talent and boundless energy.

They gave him what Michelangelo never enjoyed, complete carte blanche to develop his art; they built him a prodigious studio, gave him a large park to lay out and embellish; they provided all the assistants and workmen he asked for; they have spent up to date well over four million dollars on the project, and in exchange Vigeland worked year after year with ferocious energy.

He saw no one except his masons and foundrymen. He showed no one what he was up to. In inviolable seclusion he worked and worked. The occupation and the Quisling regime passed unnoticed in the studio and it was during the war that his great work was finally revealed.

It is a vast monolith, explicitly and uncompromisingly phallic, on which converge bridges and avenues lined with a multitudinous subhuman zoo in bronze and granite representing the cycles of life from embryo to skeleton.

There are huge, bald, naked, bearded, fleshy men wrestling and courting promiscuously and kicking their children about like footballs; there are shriveled old couples on the point of death; there are grisly skeletons, and there is also what perhaps is the only existing statue of a foetus.

It is a stupendous achievement, and in all that mass of writhing muscle there is no hint anywhere of any intellectual process or spiritual aspiration. I suppose it is the most depressing spectacle it is possible to encounter; something far more awful than the ruins of Hiroshima. And standing in that sunny park with the children splashing delightedly in the fountains, I wondered what hope there was for the people who had made it.

Push-Button Era Foreseen Through Vending Machine

CHICAGO, Jan. 24 (AP).—The president of the National Automatic Merchandising Association believes that in five years the coin machine industry will grow to two-billion-dollar proportions.

Vending machines, he said, will enable women to do their laundry during the lunch hour and housewives to pick up emergency groceries without leaving their apartment buildings.

Robert Z. Greene, the association president, added these details to his predictions:

By 1952 there will be 2,300,000 coin-operated merchandising machines in the United States.

Daily sales of 10 cents a machine for penny and service devices, $1 for candy, $2.50 for carbonated beverages and $4 for cigarettes, will account for a combined volume of 1½ billions.

Additional sales from such devices as vendors of stamps, coffee, milk, ice cream, sandwiches, insurance and groceries will bring the total sales to well over two billion dollars.

He foresaw automatic grocery merchandising as ultimately reaching an annual volume of 100 million dollars through installation of machines in apartment buildings.

"Most of these sales," Greene said, "would not be made. Now, if a housewife finds herself out of beans or rice when preparing dinner, she isn't apt to make a special trip to the grocery but will do without it."

Four Widely Differing Books Give Good Caribbean Picture

By Lewis Gannett

ALL THE BEST IN THE CARIBBEAN, by Sydney Clark. Dodd, Mead. 251 pp. $3.50.
LANDS OF THE INNER SEA: THE WEST INDIES AND BERMUDA, by W. Adolphe Roberts. Coward-McCann. 301 pp. $4.
DEMOCRACY AND EMPIRE IN THE CARIBBEAN, by Paul Blanshard. Macmillan. 379 pp. $5.
THE UNITED STATES AND THE CARIBBEAN, by Dexter Perkins. Harvard. 253 pp. $3.

YOU CAN have high tea in New York on Friday afternoon and breakfast in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Jamaica, or a late breakfast even in Dutch Curacao. That is, if you have the money, the reservations and the energy. You can have two days in the tropics and commute back to New York for Monday morning office work.

If that is the kind of traveler you are, probably Sydney Clark's "All the Best in the Caribbean" is all the book you want to read. He tells you about the airways and the best hotels throughout the islands and south into Colombia and Venezuela, gives you thumbnail—well, anyway, little-fingernail — sketches of history and burbles about tropical paradises all the way. He even mentions a few longer books. He also expresses admiration for the ghastly project of a synthetic mountain currently being built in the Dominican Republic in honor of Columbus. The hasty traveler will find his book eminently practical.

Adolphe Roberts's "Lands of the Inner Sea" gets well beyond arroz con pollo in its discussion of national dishes, boldly calls "Sloppy Joe's" in Havana "utterly commonplace," notices the slums adjoining the paradise of the Myrtle Bank Hotel at Kingston in Jamaica, and frankly discusses the role of Dictator Trujillo in the Dominican Republic.

Roberts was born in Jamaica; He writes as something more than a tourist, for readers with at least a reflective tourist's eye. His book includes the Guianas, the Bahamas and Bermuda but not Colombia and Venezuela—and not the Central American republics, which are "covered" in another and less forthright volume in the same "Invitation to Travel" series.

Beneath the Surface

IF YOU really want to look beneath the idyllic surfaces in your Caribbean travels, read Paul Blanshard's "Democracy and Empire in the Caribbean." Blanshard, a one-time member of Mayor LaGuardia's New York Cabinet, was from 1942 to 1946 a State Department official in the Caribbean, but you'd never guess it from reading his book. To him the dominant fact about the palm-fringed islands is that, except for Puerto Rico, they are "black or brown proletarian countries ruled by white oligarchies." Sugar and slavery, he says, have been the central factors in Caribbean history; sugar, bananas, tourists and military bases are the central factors today.

The West Indies, as he sees them, are a vast tropical slum, most of whose people live below the level of human decency. The little island of Jamaica has a larger population than any one of the independent mainland republics of Honduras, Panama, Costa Rica and Nicaragua; and our little Puerto Rico, smaller than Jamaica, has half as many people again as Jamaica. Barbados is one of the most densely populated areas in the world. And the hungry colored majorities on these islands are more and more in a state of open revolt against their imperial rulers.

Blanshard thinks that all tourist literature should make it clear that the only tourists who will be welcome in the West Indies—beyond the front steps of the big hotels—are those free from race prejudices. That limitation would be hard on the tourist trade.

This is by far the most reflective and pungent book on the West Indies to appear in many years.

Few Doctors

DEXTER Perkins' volume in the American Foreign Policy Library, edited by Sumner Welles, deals with the independent republics both of Central America and of the Indies. It is thoroughly informed, cautiously "balanced" and statistically informing. Take such curious figures as these: Cuba has one doctor for every 1313 citizens, Costa Rica one for 3759, Honduras one for 7985, Haiti one for 11,904. More than half Honduras' and Panama's total exports are of bananas; coffee accounts for half or more of Haiti's, Guatemala's, Salvador's and Costa Rica's exports, sugar for two-thirds of Cuba's and the Dominican Republic's, and one-crop countries live on precarious margins.

Roberts' is the only one of these four books to be provided with an adequate map. And this map shows a great sanguine red line of Pan-American Highway, several stretches of which do not yet exist.

From Aristotle to Attlee

Postwar Encyclopedia Fresh as a Newspaper

By Lee Grove

THE WORLD ENCYCLOPEDIA. J. Morris Jones, managing editor. The Quarrie Corp. 10,120 pp., 19 volumes. $102.

THE Whos, Whats and Whens are admirably answered in this first major postwar encyclopedia.

This standard, dependable work in 18 volumes (the nineteenth is a reading and study guide) is an entirely new and redesigned edition.

With a profusion of illustrations and charts, and such references to contemporary life as Statesman Clement Attlee, Poet Conrad Aiken, Opera "Porgy and Bess," and V-2 flying bombs, it has the freshness of this morning's newspaper.

Articles on such divers matters as Aristotle, the Kiwi and Loch Lomond remind you that this is a reference book, while articles such as that on letter writing, in which the psychology of writing successful business sales letters is explained, make it a book of knowledge instead of a more narrow book of learning.

The "World Book" is a family encyclopedia especially designed for the upper elementary and high school student.

TO MAKE THE BOOK most useful to youthful readers, the standards for encyclopedia writing developed by Dr. William S. Gray of the University of Chicago and Dr. Bernice E. Leary of the University of Wisconsin through an extensive study were utilized.

Material is presented in a simple, factual fashion with the reading level suitable to the school grade at which the youthful reader is likely to be interested.

In articles given expanded treatment, the first part will be on a primary reading level and subsequent parts on more advanced levels, where more difficult concepts may be dealt with.

"Writing down," so offensive to readers of all ages, is thus avoided, and the adult seeking some general information on a topic in which he has no specialized interest or particular background will also find the work useful.

Since this is a family book, some articles are planned with the adult in mind. Thus an article on juvenile delinquency, employers' liability or nutrition is of real information to the mature general reader. He will also appreciate the advantage of letting junior read about atomic energy in the "World Book" rather than having to explain it to him.

COGNIZANT of the educational usefulness of pictorial aids, more than 18,000 illustrations are included as an integrated part of the text.

They include reproductions of paintings, many in six-color printing, photographs, diagrammatic drawings, pictographs, sketches and Hammond maps. Many of the 348 colored maps are double-page. Gazetteers are found on the reverse pages of the maps.

Individual maps are provided for each State, showing geographical and industrial features, supplementing the other pages of pictures depicting historic events, every day events and other features of the States.

Indicative of the wealth of illustration is the article on American Indians, with its 16 pages of drawings and photographs in color. Sixteen pages of colored pictures are also devoted to birds, with the clearly shown markings being an aid to identification.

ANOTHER FEATURE of the "World Book" is the phonetic guide to pronunciation of difficult entries. "Aurora Borealis," for example, is: "aw RO rah Bo re A lis."

The highly developed system of cross references, lists of related subjects and bibliographies also increase the encyclopedia's usefulness.

Many outstanding educators, scientists and authors are included among the 1400 contributors. Most of the articles are signed, indicating responsibility of authorship, if not of precise wording.

Physically, the book is well made, with sturdy binding and paper, and layout by the well-known typographer, W. A. Dwiggins. Almost every page has at least one illustration, and these with the numerous subheads in the articles help make the book attractive to even the most casual young eye on a rainy day.

HANDBOOK OF PSYCHIATRY. By Winfred Overholser and Winifred V. Richmond. Lippincott. 252 pp. $4.

IF ENOUGH books as readable and interesting as the "Handbook of Psychiatry," by Dr. Overholser and the late Dr. Richmond are written and read, the idea that mental illness is a social disgrace will be forever banished.

A non-technical book for the general reader, it is more extensive and more detailed than many introductory works on the subject. The chapter on the causes of mental illnesses is particularly illuminating, and the reader may find that he has been wrong all along as to what made other people queerer than himself.

The calm, here-is-exactly-what-happens chapter on the modern mental hospital should be genuinely reassuring to those with friends or relatives receiving hospital care.

The authors dispose of a popular fallacy—padded cells and strait jackets. Insofar as they know, padded cells are not in use anywhere in the country, and strait jackets "are mostly museum pieces now." "Camisoles," short jackets with sleeves which are tied on the patient so that he cannot tear his clothing or pick at his body, are sometimes used as an economical alternative to having a nurse in constant attendance, and are found chiefly in institutions for the feeble-minded, they say.

DR. OVERHOLSER superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, and Dr. Richmond, who was chief of the department of psychology at the hospital, isolate the psychoses, by chapters, according to their associations. Thus, the organic, the alcohol, the drug, the middle life, and old age, and the functional psychosis is each made more definitive and more understandable to the layman than in other books where they are given only general treatment.

The psychoneuroses are handled rather briefly, as is the psychopathic personality.

The chapter on psychiatric conditions in childhood is excellent.

Persistent truancy may be the first symptom of a criminal career, Dr. Goldberg says in her study of juvenile delinquency, drawn from the records of the school part of the Court of New York City.

Significantly, she is as concerned with causes as with cases of truancy.

Without exception, the children brought to court were more sinned against than sinning. Over and over again, one of two patterns persists: Either the offender was so mentally deficient as to be unable to face the competition of the classroom, or he was emotionally disturbed by an unstable home life.

CHILD OFFENDERS. Harriet L. Goldberg. Grune & Stratton. 215 pp. $4.

DR. GOLDBERG recognizes the wide area of disagreement over juvenile delinquency and its treatment.

Punishing parents, she says, is not the answer; it only increases the already-present resentments in the parent-child relationships.

She pleads for public non-correctional institutions where neglected children may be rehabilitated, more public funds and more understanding on the part of everyone from parents to court judges as to the causes of delinquency.

Who's Ruling Whom?

Seldes Sounds Warning on Monopoly

By Sterling North

"1000 AMERICANS: The Real Rulers of the United States." By George Seldes. Boni & Gaer. 312 pp. $3.

GEORGE SELDES, who has had a long and varied newspaper career and currently runs a sizzling weekly newsletter called "In Fact," predicts that few newspapers in America will dare to review his book, and virtually none will review it fairly. I think he underestimates both the courage and freedom of the press, while possibly overestimating his own importance as a critic of capitalism.

Seldes says that 1000 Americans who control 12 multibillion-dollar corporations, 8 huge banks, 7 big weeklies, 7 big monthlies and other critical industries and organs of opinion in America are the real rulers of the country. His charges are not new, though they do have additional current interest in view of Tom Clark's revelations on the growing tendency toward monopoly in a country which was once the Utopia of small independent businessmen and farmers.

Just how interested Seldes is in the fate of these small enterpreneurs, or even the gentler type of economic reformers who would encourage cooperatives and valley authorities, I am not quite certain. I gather that he feels that any such mixed economy is at best a mixed blessing, and that he would prefer something closer to the British system.

This, however, should not vitiate his arguments on the dangers of monopoly. If the big corporations and banks and industrial associations can make Americans believe what they want them to believe and vote as they want them to vote, the situation is dangerous and should be exposed and corrected.

It would certainly give the reader a more balanced picture, however, if Seldes included among his rule-or-ruin boys Lewis, Petrillo and the Communist Party. Certainly big labor and big agriculture are capable of furnishing almost as much pressure as big business. In fact the tendency in all fields and throughout the world is, unfortunately, toward centralization. The real question is how to modify, control and humanize what seems to be an inevitable trend at this stage of the industrial revolution.

I do not believe that Seldes' socialistic remedies will in the end prove remedies at all, since socialism, despite its promises, seems to tend toward a police state wherever it has been tried (with England's fate still anyone's guess).

I believe Seldes to be an honest, old-fashioned muck-raker willing to work hard for his convictions. I am certain that much he has written in this book is true. There may even be some good leads for the Justice Department in some of the chapters. Certainly there is food for thought in the governmental documents in the appendices.

But before we jump from the frying pan into the fire, we might stop to consider that the American system, imperfect though it may be, still furnishes the most liberty and the highest standard of living in the world.

George Seldes, author of "1000 Americans"

Among other things it still allows books by Seldes to be printed and reviewed.

"EAGLE IN THE SKY" By F. Van Wyck Mason. Lippincott. 500 pp. $3.

THIS IS THE story of three young doctors, circa 1780, who got what they wanted or what they deserved in 500 fast-moving pages.

All three of Mason's bright young men seem to have had a perfectly charming bedside manner and a way with a woman, be she bawd or countess. Asa Peabody from a Maine village and poor as a church mouse, dashing, red-headed Peter Burnham and wily, brilliant, conscienceless Lucius Devoe all were certified as bachelors of medicine on New Year's Eve 1779.

MASON

Within a few days fate had given each in turn a chance to secure one coveted opening on the medical staff of the Continental Army; given both Asa and Lucius reason to believe that Sabra Stanton might be won; given Lucius an opportunity to double-cross both his friends to secure the appointment; and finally started all three men on their separate routes to fame or dishonor.

Peter's romantic itinerary included shipping on a privateer, winning a Danish noblewoman on the Island of St. Jan, garnering a fortune after many vicissitudes, and showing up in the nick of time for the great naval battle off the capes in Virginia that may have been decisive in defeating Cornwallis.

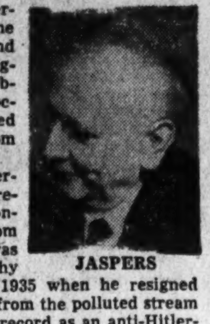
Asa, though compelled to return to his Maine village, became a surgeon in his country's central medical department in time to play a vital role as head of a hospital at Williamsburg.

Lucius, attached to Benedict Arnold's official family at West Point at the moment of the general's treasos, learned a few tricks from the fabulous traitor.

F. Van Wyck Mason is a conscientious researcher and writes with professional skill. This is one of the better stories in a category as predictable as detective fiction or westerns, raised several degrees by Mason's real devotion to American history.

"THE QUESTION OF GERMAN GUILT." By Karl Jaspers. Translated by E. B. Ashton. Dial. 123 pp. $2.

WHILE BILLIONS of dollars are being spent to revive German industry, very little is being done to revive the German conscience. Were we a less materialistic nation we would understand that reviving the first without the second presents a grave danger. And yet it is probably true that democracy cannot be forced upon a nation from above.



JASPERS

The first sign America has had of a returning German conscience comes from Karl Jaspers who was professor of philosophy at Heidelberg until 1935 when he resigned and isolated himself from the polluted stream of Nazi thought. His record as an anti-Hitlerite seems to be absolutely clean, and his present central position in German postwar philosophy is a hopeful sign.

Jaspers is an existentialist, which is to say he believes that every man is responsible for his own acts and cannot seek convenient excuses for his weakness, his crimes and his misdemeanors.

His present work is an attempt to make Germans admit varying degrees of guilt in connection with the internal and external crimes committed by the German nation under Adolf Hitler.

To clarify the muddled German mind he divides guilt into criminal guilt, political guilt, moral guilt and metaphysical guilt. Those who are guilty of crimes can and should be tried and punished. Germany as a whole must suffer for political guilt, since, says Jaspers, virtually every Germany was individually if not collectively responsible for allowing Hitler to come to power. Moral and metaphysical guilt (Jaspers does not make completely clear his differentiating between the two) are matters which Germans must ponder in their own consciences and among their closest friends.

No German philosopher can completely clean the mud of metaphysics from his boots, and Jaspers is no exception in this respect. But his contribution to straightening the warped German mind remains an enormous one. He can even make an American question his own responsibilities for (let us say) lynching, chain gangs, or preparations for atomic war. No man is guiltless, particularly in a democracy.

Simplified for use in secondary schools, this book should be distributed by the millions throughout Germany. If we had an intelligent administration in that mismanaged country, this would already be required reading throughout Bizonia.

Lane Writes Affectionately Of Big Lakes

THE WORLD'S GREAT LAKES. By Ferdinand C. Lane. Doubleday. 254 pp. $3.50.

IF YOU are so unromantic as to believe that a lake is simply a body of water surrounded by land, we prescribe a tonic evening with Ferdinand C. Lane's exciting volume.

Do you know about the Great African Rift, an earth-crack or "fault" ranging from 5000 to 11,000 feet in vertical displacement? In that rift are to be found the Jordan River trough and Dead Sea, part of the Red Sea's basin, and many of Africa's deepest lakes.

Faulting is but one of the dramatic ways in which the planet has formed basins and barriers to hold bodies of water. Volcanic action is another, creating such phenomena as beautiful Crater Lake in Oregon, the (sapphire-blue, opaque-turquoise and garnet-red) volcanic lakes on the Island of Timor, and the deadly pool emitting hydrogen sulphide fumes in Santo Domingo.

Others (very rare) seem to have been formed by huge meteors pitting the earth's surface. Many of course, are mere erosion basins or glacial kettles, or natural depressions.

No matter what the origin of a lake, it excites Lane's interest. And since over half of all the lakes in the world are on the North American continent, this book should find an enthusiastic audience.

History has been made around the lakes of the world: Storied Galilee, Baikal on "the world's white rooftree," Titicaca, cradle of the Inca race; huge, clear and cold Superior, Great Slave Lake—names to conjur with, and places worthy of description.

Lane writes about lakes as though they were living things with anthropomorphic characteristics and intentions. From dour, dank tarns to jewels of sapphire, and from festering marshes to breath-taking inland seas, he has seized the essence of each, distilled it for the reader.

A most enjoyable and information book which will start you planning canoe trips and going over your fishing tackle, always sadly aware that in 10 lifetimes you could not visit one half of all these lakes.

Miss Foster Does Another History

It becomes increasingly evident as each volume comes forth that what the youngsters of the country need—and perhaps their elders do too—is more history done in the Genevieve Foster manner.

In her treatises on Washington and Lincoln she made it quite evident that history does not need to be textbook dry. Now in Augustus Caesar's World (Scribner, $3.50), she makes it plainer that the stuff of the past can be downright interesting.

One Fine Day, by Mollie Pantern-Downes (Little-Brown) $2.50. One day in the postwar life of an upperclass English family.

A Time When Flag Didn't Follow Pound

OLD CHINA HANDS AND THE FOREIGN OFFICE, by Nathan A. Pelcovits. (King's Crown-Columbia. $3.75.)

GOVERNMENTS have been accused often of backing up the foreign trade of their merchants with soldiers and sailors, but it wasn't true of Britain in China, says Pelcovits, for there in the crucial last half of the nineteenth century, the British flag would not follow the pound.

Delving into commercial correspondence to give the other side of the picture customarily drawn on the basis of diplomatic documents, this author finds that imperial Britain refused to be imperial in the land of the Manchus. The traders believed that, with a little help from Whitehall, they could get rich quick by dealing with China's ill-clothed, ill-housed and ill-fed millions; sign a few treaties, impose a few reforms, even fix a few bayonets, and business would flourish.

Their failure to convince the Foreign Office kept China from being reduced to the dependent status of India or Egypt, says Pelcovits.

Sound Advice By Newsmen

LATE CITY EDITION, by Joseph G. Herzberg and members of the staff of the New York Herald Tribune (Holt; $3).

THE experts who tell in this very readable book how a metropolitan daily paper is made have some sound advice:

Whatever you aspire to be in the editorial side of a newspaper, son, get your training in straight reporting.

Says the sports writer: "If you really want to be a sports writer, go hound the city editor for a job chasing fire engines."

Says the arts critic: "There are occasional experts who come to journalistic criticism without any preliminary training in newspaper work, but many of the most celebrated have put in their apprenticeship on three-alarm fires or police courts."

And the reason, says Herzberg, young city editor, is that the good reporter has a devouring curiosity for the facts, which keeps him alert. S. G. B.

Odds and Ends About Books

Mason Tells Story Of Old Navy Fight

THE REVOLUTION the colonial troops were fighting might have gone differently had Admiral de Grasse failed to turn back the British squadron under Admiral Graves. Cornwallis would otherwise have been reinforced, says Van Wyck Mason, and even Washington believed that the Revolution would have been lost.

Mason's "Eagle in the Sky" (Lippincott) tells the details of that neglected but important naval action.

THE Book-of-the-Month Club has disregarded the admonition to beware the Ides of March. They have accepted Thornton Wilder's new novel by that name for their March selection. Harpers will publish the trade edition on February 18. Reynal & Hitchcock and Harcourt, Brace & Co. are effecting a merger. Count on Emily Harvin's scorching indictment of insane asylums to light a fire under some State officials. Her "Stubborn Wood" (Ziff-Davis) is crammed with dynamite.

SOME BOOKS for children are professional finger exercises in story-telling keyed to a youthful market and written for profit. But several recent juveniles have had astonishing and unlikely origins, and seem to have been written purely for fun.

For instance, there is Rose Oller Harbaugh's completely delightful "Eddie Elephant Has a Party." Rose is the resourceful and successful head of the huge Marshall Field book department in Chicago. A book had been written about the little Elephant, Eddie, and Rose wanted him to come to autograph some copies.

There was no particular difficulty getting the 7-foot adolescent pachyderm onto the third floor (books, rugs, candy) and Eddie quickly learned how to take a big rubber stamp in his trunk to autograph hundreds of books. The customers were delighted.

But when it came to getting Eddie to leave his party, the real excitement began. It makes for a most charming book beautifully illustrated by Susanne Suba (Rand, McNally).

Then there is Sinclair Lewis' "Bongo." The fact that America's most scathing satirist should wish to write a story for children is in itself curious. Actually, I believe it was the intriguing idea of having the story come to life under the clever brushes of Walt Disney's animators which inspired him. As one of Simon & Schuster's Big Golden Books, the Lewis fable has sold hundreds of thousands of copies.

A fairly good case could be made for the occasional feeling one has that the only people worth writing for are children. They still have a fresh, uncluttered curiosity. They have not yet become cynical and blase. They can still be molded toward civilized attitudes. And each year the author has a new crop of readers.

Modern library giant: Great Tales of Terror and the Supernatural, edited by Herbert A. Wise and Phyllis Fraser ($1.95).

College Dictionary Well Worth Price

Random House has proudly issued The American College Dictionary as "the most authoritative desk dictionary ever published."

Edited by Clarence L. Barnhart "with the assistance of 355 authorities and specialists," this ambitious work features large type, a single alphabetical list including proper names and foreign words, and plenty of definition of the latest scientific terms. It is well worth the $5 price.

Pelican Book

Here's Guide To Reading For 35 Cents

NEW YORK, Jan. 24 (AP).—"Good reading, a guide to the world's best books, costs only 35 cents at the start but can run you into a lot of money before you're through.

It's a Pelican publication containing in essence a recommended list of 1000 titles. Even when the recommended editions are inexpensive bantams, penguins or pocketbooks, a library of 1000 volumes costs a lot. But this is a sound selection, not always the "best," at least in the contemporary field, but always worthy. If anyone were starting fresh in the field of literature, he'd need to read at least 950 of the 1000.

The book was prepared by the committee on college reading, Atwood H. Townsend, chairman. The advisory board, headed by John Erskine, consists of Carl Carmer, Stuart Cloete, Norman Corwin, Thomas Craven, John Dos Passos, Clifton Fadiman, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, John Hersey, Sinclair Lewis, Lin Yutang, Carl Sandburg, and Cornelia Otis Skinner. It had appeared in pamphlet form; in this revised edition it had advance sales of over 50,000.

There's another good pelican: R. H. Tawney's "Religion and the Rise of Capitalism," already a classic though it was first published only in 1926 . . . and if you're still interested in bargains, there's the second annual John Kieran almanac, "Information Please 1948," for which Garden City asks $2.

The manuscript of "The Memoirs of Cordell Hull" has been received by Macmillan, which plans publication in May.

Working Six-day Week at 66

Retire? Frances Perkins Scoffs

By Rowland Evans, Jr.

ALMOST every morning at 9 she leaves her home, walks down to the corner and hails a taxi. She might be a grandmother on a shopping tour, except she has no time for shopping.

She's the only member of President Roosevelt's first Cabinet still in her Government's service. Her name is Frances Perkins.

Since September, 1946, she has been one of the three Civil Service Commissioners. Miss Perkins' role as commissioner is an inconspicuous one, far removed from the dynamic part she played in the hectic New Deal era.

Her job demands periodic country-wide travel to 14 regional Civil Service offices, speech-making, setting up competitive examinations, guarding against inefficiency and fraud and acting, with her two associates, as a Civil Service policy-making body.

Just now the commissioners are busy with another job—setting up a system of loyalty checks under the Loyalty Review Board.

It's a full schedule that Miss Perkins (she'll be 66 next April) maintains five and sometimes six days a week. She handles it smoothly and gives no thought to the day when she must retire.

Miss Perkins has made it her life's business to improve relationships between employers and employes. Her present job, she points out, is a natural extension of doing just that. Much of her work is the handling of appeals of Government employes and working out satisfactory employment conditions.

Now There's a Law

BACK in 1902 when Miss Perkins was beginning to acquire the social thinking which advanced her to President Roosevelt's Cabinet, there were few "employment arrangements" between management and labor of the type she subsequently evolved. She tells an illustrative story:

"Tuesday and Thursday evenings I spent at a girl's club in Boston. I helped them learn how to knit and sew, and taught them games and that kind of thing, you know.

"Well, I got pretty familiar with my girls, and whenever a crisis came up I was always asked to help out.

"One day a girl got her hand caught in a honey-dipping machine (similar to a punch-press). She was only 14. Her hand had to be amputated well above the wrist.

"Imagine! Only 14!

"Naturally I thought her employer would take care of her, pay her doctor's bills, or at least part of them, and give her some kind of support until she could get back on a job.

"But oh no, not at all. He was very, very nice about it but said why should he be responsible? He pointed out there was no law to involve him at all in the tragedy. I just couldn't believe it.

"But today I can tell people there is a law and that kind of thing can't happen. Today it's the law that 14-year-old girls can't even work."

Lewis to a T

MISS PERKINS puts her whole heart into the telling of a story. Her hands and arms act as story props and she modulates her voice to suit the emotion she's describing. With a little practice she could be a first-rate mimic.

Her takeoffs of public figures she has known or worked with are masterpieces, especially those of John L. Lewis.

The question occurs: "What keeps Frances Perkins going? Why doesn't she retire to her home in Maine and start her memoirs?"

After all, she is the only woman ever to attain Cabinet rank. She kept her Secretary of Labor post longer than any other predecessor (12 years).

MISS FRANCES PERKINS
. . . "I don't think I'll stop until I die"

She was a successful social worker in New York City and held important New York State labor posts from 1912 to 1933. She wrote a labor column which appeared in 1100 labor publications. She is an author—"The Roosevelt I Knew" has been translated into five languages.

Isn't she about ready to quit?

"Why certainly not," she told me, slightly outraged at the thought. "Why should I stop working? I'm perfectly healthy, I can think as clearly as I ever could and I can perform a service.

"I love my work, my contacts with people, the responsibilities I have to meet and the obligations I must fulfill.

"Stop working? You know, I don't think I'll stop until I die."

Weathered All Storms

AND you believe it. Her face, which looks variously like that of kindly grandmother and straight-thinking, intellectually-tough labor expert, is virtually unlined. She carries her light gray hair knotted above the back of her neck.

Her wit is gay and quick, her mind is far from being closed to new ideas.

Her Cabinet career was stormy with congressional fights. Senator Harry Byrd and former Representative Martin Dies, both members of her party, as well as Representative J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.), all demanded at different times that she be fired. Thomas laid the groundwork for impeachment procedings.

Soon after the war started the American Legion demanded that she resign her post in favor of "the cause of national unity."

But Miss Perkins did not resign. She kept on fighting for her objectives.

When she left office she had helped put across unemployment benefits and old-age insurance and the 40-hour week. She had helped set up a public works program and established public employment offices. (When President Truman headed the Missouri public employment system, Miss Perkins was his boss.)

She had won a 16-year-age minimum on employment of young people. She had won protection against the fall of wages to the "unspeakably low levels of 1932-33" by establishing a floor under them.

And she had helped set up the collective bargaining method of solving labor disputes which today is the basis of all employer-employe relationships.

The Shelving of Wallace

Maligned 'Bosses' Did One Good Deed

By Bob Considine

Copyright, International News Service

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—The political boss is generally a pretty menacing figure. We think of him in cartoon terms, and he is usually depicted as a wraith of evil looming over the scrubbed-faced fellows he has put in office.

Up close they never seem very sinister, especially to newspapermen. They either genuinely like us or they put on a good show at liking us. They have kids, take a drink, play the races and go to church.

One of the all-time bosses lives here—Ed Kelly, a big, good-natured Irishman who has been either the No. 1 or No. 2 boss of the Democratic machine in these parts for more years than you could count on your relatives' toes.

The country owes Kelly and his boss friends, Ed Flynn, Ed Pauley and Frank Hague, one great debt: They knocked off Hank Wallace as Vice President in 1944.

Hard to Digest

ROOSEVELT, as any of them will tell you, was a hard man to budge. On the Q. T. he made a kind of whipping boy out of Wallace in the months before the convention.

The old man would call his deputy in for lunch and then needle him on the ground that he was no vote-getter. Wallace each time would offer to withdraw himself from the 1944 ticket, but Roosevelt would laugh and go on eating. Wallace never had much of an appetite at these things.

But when the chips were down, Roosevelt sent his now-famous letter to the Chicago convention which said, "If I were a delegate, I would vote for Henry Wallace for the vice presidential nomination."

That's where the bosses stepped in. They went to Roosevelt singly and in groups, and finally the old man began to waver. He called Flynn in one day and said he had jotted down three names of prospective Vice Presidents.

The first one was Sherman Minton, former Federal judge and Senator from this region. Flynn snorted indignantly. The second was Henry J. Kaiser, but Flynn told the President that Kaiser had been unfriendly to him in 1940. The third name was Justice William O. Douglas.

"Now you're talking," Flynn said.

Fateful Stroll

FOR a time it appeared that Douglas would be the man. In fact, he was told so, informally, and was delighted. But the dice fell the wrong way.

Bosses Flynn, Pauley, Hannegan and a couple of others were summoned to Washington and invited to the White House for a quiet dinner. The bulk of them went from the Mayflower Hotel by cab. Flynn and Hannegan walked . . . and during that walk the name of Harry S. Truman first came into consideration. Hannegan was, of course, his champion. Flynn, during the walk, consented to go along with Truman.

But Roosevelt's letter about Wallace had already been sent. Indeed, as Roosevelt went through Chicago just before the convention, he shook hands warmly with Wallace and wished him luck.

Then—under the heavy pressure of the bosses—he wrote another letter, which they kept under cover until the sheep-like delegates had demonstrated for Wallace. Then they flashed it. It was the letter which failed to mention Wallace, but pointed out that Truman or Douglas would attract votes to the ticket.

Douglas Ditched

THERE is still a report around Washington that Roosevelt's letter read "Douglas or Truman" and indicated that he preferred the first named.

But Flynn, Kelly, Hannegan and Pauley stressed Truman . . . and Truman it became, even though—when they told him—he had in his pocket the speech he planned to make in nominating Jimmy Byrnes for the vice presidential nomination.

The point of this story is not to display the Swiss-watch workings of the smoke-filled rooms. It is simply to say that, whatever else they have done in life, the bosses pulled an historic "cross" on Hank.

Polls show that the average American today would consider it a calamity if, by some remote chance, Wallace became President on a third party ticket. Not one in a hundred potential voters believes that is possible.

Yet he would be President today if it were not for the silent men who arrange such matters. They set out to pry him off the ticket because—as Kelly once told me—they were almost certain that Roosevelt would die in office.

"He (Wallace) never would have known when to stop going to his left," Kelly likes to say.

Amherst Carves a New Milestone

Youthful President Charles W. Cole (left) could pass for "one of the boys" in this conference with some of his Amherst students, and the portraits of dignified predecessors almost seem to look down with condescension. The look would fade, however, if the wraiths could hear him lay down his program

By Fred M. Hechinger

AMHERST, Mass., Jan. 24.—The only thing better than an experiment is a successful experiment.

HECHINGER

Here at Amherst something new has been started, but after a few days' inspection it seems to me that, better than a novelty, the Amherst curriculum represents an important milestone in American college education.

Books, pamphlets and treatises have been written about the need for a new, general education scheme. Some universities have cautiously introduced partially reformed courses, to be attended by those who approved. But too many American institutions of higher learning have continued to muddle through on a rather wholesome, but not quite sufficient, fare of tradition and well-tried principles.

At Amherst a special committee of alumni and faculty members has been at work for two years surveying the changing needs of education. After careful study and discussion they drew up a new curriculum. Then—at the beginning of the current academic term — they followed through with action. Since they were sure of the need for change and satisfied that their efforts had been thorough, they took the plunge valiantly without first dangling a dubious academic toe into the cold waters of educational progress.

Emphasis on Principles

THIS year's class in toto became one of guinea pigs—or of pioneers, as dignified alumni prefer to put it. Students have no choice in the matter, and in theory they will not know whether the operation is going to be successful until they graduate 3½ years from now. But the handwriting on the red brick and white marble walls of Amherst is highly promising.

President Charles W. Cole of Amherst subscribes to the history-proven theory that "nothing fails like success." Initial progress has permitted American higher education to slow down to near-stagnation, particularly in the social science fields and the humanities. Education and vocational training were beginning to get tangled up in unhealthy confusion.

In blueprinting the new curriculum, Amherst subscribed to A. N. Whitehead's belief that education should "enable you to shed details in favor of principles." Under the new plan all freshmen will share three required courses: science; European civilization; English and the humanities. Their fourth requirement is a modern or classical language or a free elective if they have fulfilled the linguistic prerequisites.

But more important than that skeleton outline is that these courses will be taught by faculty divisions rather than departments. In science, for instance, mathematicians, physicists, chemists and astronomers will offer a single course. By combining English and the humanities, Amherst rules out elementary composition writing as something a freshman ought to have learned in high school. Instead, the new curriculum calls for instruction in writing and thinking.

Taken as a Whole

EMPHASIS in the humanities is not on the reading of a maximum number of books, but on the intelligent digesting of the outstanding masterpieces. There is to be no division between history, literature, sociology and philosophy in the discussion of the Odyssey, the Old Testament, Plato, the Greek dramatists. Obviously, the authors themselves never intended that there be any such division.

In the second year the core program continues. In an entirely new course, "American Problems," 12 pertinent phases of United States history are debated in a combination of sociological, political and economic considerations. Among the topics to be dealt with are "Carnegie's idea of democracy contrasted with Walt Whitman's," "The political, economic and social aspects of the Revolutionary War," and the vital contemporary question, "Was the New Deal a revolution?"

A new pattern of teaching the sciences as one single unit under the heading, "Evolution of the Earth and Man," will be held together by the string of evolution running through the diverse material.

"In other places science instructors would be afraid to lower their reputation in such experiments," says Cole. "But our faculty need not worry. They know each other."

The division of fine arts will combine the teaching of music, drama and the graphic arts. At first students will compare the use of such terms as "composition" or "line" in the different fields of artistic work. Then they will study the arts by seeing and listening rather than by reading theories. Said Charles H. Morgan, professor of fine arts: "A painting must speak for itself. It should be read, not read about."

'Fun' With Language

METHODS are as revolutionary at Amherst as the curriculum. All courses are to be taught the laboratory way.

I listened to a French language "lab" period and found a group of students informally conversing with a young French instructor. Even in a "formal" German class I witnessed a new spirit: While reading one of Thomas Mann's novels, students seemed to have fun with literature, language and sociological questions all at once. It was pointed out to me that Amherst rejects Mr. Dooley's principle that "it doesn't matter what you teach a boy so long as he doesn't like it."

With a normal enrollment of 850—now temporarily swollen to 1150—Amherst is small enough to stress individual teaching. Under the new plan classes are to remain below 25 students and eventually will reach an ideal low of 12. But, at the same time, the common core which all Amherst men share will permit comparative discussion when students meet in lounges.

"Of all the things that go to make up a college, the teacher is the most important," I was told. "Without him, the best planned curriculum, the most efficient administration, the best stocked library, the best equipped laboratories, the finest student body, are useless."

It is significant that Amherst is campaigning for a two-million-dollar Second Century Fund, not to build another impressive set of halls but to pay better salaries to a better faculty. It won't show in catalogues, but it will show up very noticeably in terms of "Amherst education."

Only 24 Failed

THERE were objections to the new curriculum, of course. Many alumni felt any change unnecessary, if not iconoclastic. That is the way of alumni everywhere. Others were worried that raising the weekly quota of classroom hours from 16 to 23 and demanding a greater mental effort would result in "all work and no play" drudgery.

At the beginning a self-consciously experimental student body seemed somewhat strained. Said one: "When they talk about all those conflicting 'forces' in the science class, it's quite clear. But back in my dormitory I suddenly don't seem to be able to see those forces any more." Still—when the six-week marks were posted, only 24 out of 1000 grades were unsatisfactory. The normal number of failures had been halved.

Recently students were asked to hand in an unsigned compilation of their working hours. The average was an eight-hour day. One of the few students whose estimate exceeded that might have caused more concern had not his report been scribbled on a well-used gin-rummy score.

That Amherst men are required to do a full student's job is not contested. But by now the girls at nearby Smith and Mount Holyoke are comforted to know that academic purpose has not snuffed out the more charming side of life.

A Modest Dynamo

NO MEMBER of the harmonious faculty team would dispute the fact that President Cole is the driving force behind the new curriculum. The 41-year-old administrator is confident.

"The scheme looks even better in operation than it did on paper," he said. "By 1951 all Amherst men will have at least one quarter of their college course in common. We are trying to restore something of the oldtime community of knowledge."

The youthful educator's clear vision blends with the charm of intelligent modesty to give one of America's important educational experiments a dynamic leading personality.

In these days of commercial superlatives one is reluctant to go on record with conclusions of praise. But if the Amherst experiment is not followed and supported by those interested in liberal education, it will be America's loss.

A postcard arrived recently on Dr. Cole's desk. "An admirable program—a pattern for liberal arts colleges," it commented laconically. The signature was that of philosopher-educator John Dewey.

Jailbird in Hand Worth 2 in Oslo

OSLO (AP).—A man recently went to jail for six months for a friend.

The friend had been sentenced for embezzlement, but got a good job before he was sent to jail. He paid his substitute about $200 to replace him in prison.

When the deal was discovered, the court decided that since the innocent man seemed to like life behind the bars, he should be granted six more months of it. The volunteer furthermore lost his civil rights for 10 years.

And the embezzler, of course, had to go to jail in person.

Reptile Needs 'Protection'

Even Rattlesnake Has A Legislative Lobby

By John W. Ball

Post Reporter

IN WASHINGTON, Congress is studying legislation to save the world. In the attractive prairie town of Okeene, Okla., a group of young businessmen is studying legislation to save the rattlesnakes.

This is not as funny as it sounds, for to Okeene the rattlesnakes which abound in the "Gyp" Hills—so named because of the enormous supplies of gypsum there—are an important source of income.

Every year thousands of dollars worth of rattlesnake serum is shipped out of Okeene, plus large amounts of rattlesnake skins and canned rattlesnake meat, plus hundreds of rattlesnakes sold to zoos and rattlesnake farms.

A year ago the Okeene Junior Chamber of Commerce prepared a bill to put a closed season on rattlesnakes. It also opposes the indiscriminate killing of the reptiles at any time, because they bring from 50 cents to $5 apiece alive. They are also sold by weight.

$87.50 a Day Return

RECENTLY the writer was in Okeene and saw a tenant farmer bring in his catch for two days. They were in a trailer hitched to a small truck. His take was $175.

But the biggest feature of this rattlesnake town is the Annual Rattlesnake Roundup, put on by the Junior Chamber. The Oklahoma Game and Fish News recently referred to it as the "Nation's most bizarre sporting event."

On the eve of the hunt a rattlesnake banquet is held, where the hunters exchange stories of their snaky adventures of previous years. Usually there is a reptile expert from some famous zoo as guest speaker.

On the day before the hunt—usually a Sunday—there is a formal parade and a snake show, where visitors may view at close range all species of rattlesnakes found in the United States.

In another room is an exhibit of human skeletons found in the caves of the Gyp Hills. These skeletons lend themselves to one of the wierdest arguments ever put up to a legislature for passage of a bill.

The rattlesnakes, according to the Okeene Jaycees, protected the early settlers of the community. Here is part of their story:

"Pioneers frequently wondered why some gun-toting, marauding bandits, who emulated the Old West in early Oklahoma days by terrorizing settlers, failed to return after holing up in the Gypsum Hills," their appeal to the legislature reads.

"Recent discovery of human skeletons in snake-infested Salt Creek Canyon, west of Okeene, and a thorough study by herpetologists have convinced many that rattlesnakes took a large toll of the gunmen who attempted to winter in the nearby caves and almost inaccessible ledges of this famed nesting grounds of the giant man-killing reptiles.

One of the champions of last year's Rattlesnake Roundup at Okeene was Mrs. Ruth Hammons, a home town girl. That's not a hawser in the foreground

The roundup itself is held in the Gyp Hills. Last year nearly 500 rattlers were taken by the 2000 hunters before the 4 p. m. deadline. The prizes are very handsome.

The Rattlesnake Club of Okeene now numbers more than 5000 persons, in all parts of the country. To qualify, a member must pick up a live rattler with his bare hands.

Headquarters of the International Rattlesnake Association is in a large garage building, and there most of the rattlesnake business of the community is conducted.

There is a tremendous demand for rattlesnake serum from pharmaceutical companies and the medical departments of the armed services. It is used in the treatment of epilepsy, hemorrhage and cancer and for making anti-venom serum.

Test Pilots' Test Pilot

Transonic Fliers Weigh Ton at Bottom of Dive

By Rennie Taylor

MOFFETT FIELD, Calif., Jan. 24 (AP).—Imagine the surprise of a pilot who eases back on the control stick of a high speed plane intending to climb, and finds instead that he is diving toward somebody's cow pasture.

Or the bewilderment of a flier coming out a fast dive when he smacks into a peculiar mass of air which turns the plane's nose violently upward with a force seven times stronger than the earthward pull of gravity.

Or the uneasiness of the fellow who gets up around 600 MPH only to have his plane go into great up and down sweeps like a roller coaster, or into weaving, crabwise movements accompanied by tail switching, or perhaps an ominous palpitation of a wing or a part of a tail surface.

These are some of the things which can happen to planes flying near the speed of sound. Until now they have been kept in the background because flight at near sonic speeds is linked to national security and some of the details are on the secret list.

Test pilots approaching that critical speed have found the sonic barrier guarded by air hazards roughly comparable to the barbed wire entanglements and mine fields bordering a Siegfried Line.

Some fliers who have ventured close to this barrier have brought back information which has made subsequent approaches easier and safer. Among them is Lawrence A. Clousing, veteran test pilot at the Ames Laboratory of the National Advisory Committee for for Aeronautics.

For lifting the veil from some of the transonic flight phenomena, Clousing will be given one of the top honors in aviation Monday at a dinner in New York—the Chanute Award conferred annually by the Institute of the Aeronautical Sciences. Winners in previous years have included Howard Hughes, airplane manufacturer and film producer, and Edmund Allen, famous test pilot who was killed in a plane crash several years ago.

Clousing is a sort of test pilot for test pilots. With the aid of fellow pilots, engineers and the wind tunnels at Ames Laboratory here, his findings have contributed to the education of pilots and to the design of planes able to go faster and faster without getting caught in transonic booby traps. Now they are up against the barrier itself.

Figured in Percentages

FOR 2½ years Clousing was the uncrowned king of high-speed flying, flying at speeds upward of 600 mph when that figure was mostly an aviator's dream.

Like other transonic fliers, Clousing did not measure his speed in miles per hour. Instead

Lawrence A. Clousing, veteran test pilot, shown climbing into the cockpit of a fast ship at Moffett Field, will receive one of aviation's top honors, The Chanute Award, at a New York dinner tomorrow it was calculated in percentages of the speed of sound, which varies in relation to temperature and altitude. These percentages are called mach (pronounced mock) numbers.

Under standard conditions at sea level the speed of sound is about 760 mph, which is equal to mach No. 1. At 30,000 feet altitude the speed of sound is about 680 mph, and any plane which travels that fast at that height is flying at mach No. 1. At sea level a plane traveling at 660 mph is flying at mach No. .88.

Soon after starting this series of transonic flights, which were made by climbing to 30,000 feet or higher in a P-80 Shooting Star and diving earthward with the jet motor well opened up, Clousing attained a mach No. 87. In terms of ground speed at sea level, this was the equivalent of 658 mph.

That was the nearest to the speed of sound anyone ever had flown officially, and the figure was not bettered for 2½ years. It finally was exceeded by planes of more advanced design. The official speed record for level flight still is below Clousing's mark. It is 650.6 mph, set a few months ago by Marine Maj. Marion Carl in a Douglas Skystreak.

(Since then Carl's mark has been bettered unofficially by Gene May, a test pilot, also in a Douglas Skystreak which was clocked at 680 mph. Following May's flight the XS-1 is reported to have exceeded mach No. 1, which means that it has flown faster than sound, but the Army has maintained silence about it.)

Controls Reversed

HERETOFORE nothing has been said publicly about the 41-year-old Clousing's achievements because of their bearing on security. The record of his work is sprinkled with hair-raising experiences which serve as caution signs for others.

The perverse behavior of the control stick near sonic speeds was encountered by Clousing while diving a P-80. He found that when the wings were set at a certain slight climbing angle their lifting power decreased, causing the plane to dive. He also discovered that during dive pullouts at near sonic speeds the plane unpredictably nosed upward, and that to prevent further uprearing he had to push forward on the stick—the reverse of what a pilot ordinarily does to come safely out of a dive.

(The factors involved in control oscillations, aviation researchers explain, are more a matter of aircraft design than of air phenomenon. Scientists now understand fairly well the factors which cause reversal of control pressures and have avoided it in later designs. The major considerations appear to be the torsional rigidity of the plane and the location of the controls with respect to the wing.)

Probably the most spectacular of Clousing's transonic adventures was an unexpected pitch-up of the P-80 while coming out of a dive at 27,000 feet at mach number .85, which is equal to about 650 mph at sea level.

He was heading downward at a 35-degree angle and pulling hard on the stick to level off, when it nosed upward. The split second change in rate of descent imposed a force on Clousing equal to seven times that of gravity.

Spine-Crushing Jolt

THERE are times when a plane taking a sudden dip can drop away from an unstrapped pilot, leaving him suspended 3 or 4 inches above the seat. A pitch-up at seven times the force of gravity would bring the seat up against him with a jolt sufficient to crush his vertebrae.

Clousing got one such shock.

"I sat down pretty hard," he said, "but escaped injury. Now I always make sure to strap myself in well and keep my head up."

The roller coaster effect reported by Clousing also starts without warning when planes of a certain type get into the transonic range.

Buffeting is another transonic hair-raiser. The pilot notices mysterious, rapid changes in stresses on various parts of the plane. They can start almost anywhere, on tail, wing or aileron. Any appreciable increase in speed or decrease in altitude can aggravate them.

Transonic flutter is the newest hazard. It is something like buffeting. If there is any appreciable play or looseness in the control mechanisms, they may start shimmying. This may be due, Clousing reports, to differences in the velocity of air masses attacking the plane's surfaces.

Clousing once bent the wings of a plane in a rip-snorting dive that gave him the hardest jolt of his career. The plane snapped out of the dive with such suddenness that Clousing was subjected to a braking action equal to 12 times the force of gravity. The effect was the same as if his weight increased in a couple of seconds to 2000 pounds. This is about twice as much as test pilots ordinarily are expected to stand.

To Whom It May Concern:

TED WILLIAMS' .351 batting average, compiled in his six seasons with the Red Sox, is topped by the lifetime records of only three men in big league history: Ty Cobb (.367), Rogers Hornsby (.358) and Joe Jackson (.356) . . . Forty per cent of all whistle-blowing in basketball occurs while players are scrambling for possession of the ball underneath the baskets, according to a survey by Radio Sportscaster Bill Brandt. As a remedy he suggests tap-in shots not be counted as goals . . . Bob Rodenberg, president of the Baltimore Colts, now holds 60 per cent of the club's stock since buying out the holdings of Maury Nee and Karl Corby, jr., his Washington partners who took losses of more than $20,000 last season . . . Nee has also resigned from the Washington Touchdown Club, charging club officials with giving the All-America Conference the brushoff in its award to outstanding players. He claims a half dozen players in the AA outperformed Sammy Baugh, who was given an award . . . Bobby Layne, Texas U. quarterback who starred against Alabama in the Sugar Bowl, will confer with the Colts' owners this week on a 1948 contract and may also talk terms with the Baltimore Orioles, who want to sign him as a pitcher. Layne has never been beaten in 27 conference starts on the mound for Texas . . . Last week's dinner of the New York Boxing Writers Association was notable for the fact that Rocky Graziano wore a necktie for the first time in his life.

POVICH

WHEN PRO TENNIS CHAMPION BOBBY RIGGS walked into Uline Arena for his match with Jack Kramer the other night he was greeted by a Washingtonian who beat him for the National boys' single title in 1932 . . . Don Leavens, 701 Flower ave., Takoma Park, Md., who is now a transportation economist with the Department of Agriculture . . . Riggs and Kramer are rescheduled for another Washington appearance in May and there will be no great rush for tickets after the dull show they staged last week . . . Johnny Edwards, coach of the Texas Wesleyan basketball team that played Georgetown last night, had a much-interrupted playing career of his own. After playing at John Tarleton College in 1927-28, he spent 10 years coaching high school teams in Texas and then returned to college in 1938 to star as a guard for Texas Wesleyan, making the All-Conference team . . . College wrestling folks are tightening their physical requirements following the death of a Washington College, Maryland, wrestler two weeks ago. Before a match between teams of Howard U. and Virginia State University last Friday night, examining physicians disqualified five members of the two clubs because of high blood pressure . . . Six members of the Redskins will troop into the Red Cross Blood Donors Center tomorrow to give a pint of their blood to the current emergency which finds blood banks low. They are Joe Tereshinski, Al De Mao, Jim Castiglia, John Adams, Coach Herman Ball and Equipment Man Kelly Miller . . . Washington's blood banks require 30,000 pints annually.

JACKIE ROBINSON, most valuable player on the Dodgers last year when he was drawing only a $5500 salary, is reportedly asking for $20,000 for 1948 . . . Consider Robinson's reaction to Branch Rickey's announcement that he had offered Charley Conerly, Mississippi's All-American, $100,000 to sign a Dodger football contract for four years . . . Conerly's price tag may be a clue as to why the Redskins traded draft rights to him in a deal with the Giants for Halfback Howie Livingston . . . Ray Arcel, trainer of Joe Palooka in Ham Fisher's comic strip, is, in real life, Ray Arcel, who is now training Jackie Cranford, Washington heavyweight . . . Bob Feller, whose baseball wages added up to $87,500 last year, counting bonuses and expense money, can claim that he is the highest paid player in baseball history, but that doesn't make it so. In 1930, when Babe Ruth drew $80,000 from the Yankees, his signed articles and other honorariums put him far above the $100,000 figure . . . Edward J. (Eddie) Erdlatz, assistant coach at Navy, who has been producing outstanding ends for the last several years, is now being boomed as head coach at the academy since Don Faurot of Missouri withdrew from the picture . . . Baseball Commissioner Chandler didn't consult the baseball club owners before extending the hand of peace to the Mexican League . . . If Mexico sets its baseball house in order and wins recognition from the majors, it will be the second triumph for Chandler, who helped clean up baseball in Cuba.

FIFTEEN AMERICAN LEAGUERS will be entitled to the gold passes issued by the league when they become 10-year men next season. They are Ted Williams, Joe Haynes, Jake Early, John Berardino, Dizzy Trout, Charley Keller, Buddy Rosar, Barney McCoskey, Joe Dobson, Mike Tresh, Nelson Potter, Hal Wagner, Sam Chapman, Skeeter Webb and Don Gutteridge . . . The baseball-story-of-the-week was out of St. Louis, where the Browns announced they were raising prices next season, after selling $450,000 worth of ballplayers . . . the Redskins, who broke down to the extent of admitting cigarette advertisements to their game programs, still draw the line at accepting liquor ads . . . It costs $30,500 in postage stamps to send a letter from Kunming to Cleveland (Chinese dollars) . . . Jess Hill, the outfielder who came to the Nats from the Yankees 10 years ago along with Pitcher Jimmy DeShong, now is head coach of the track team of the University of California, his alma mater . . . As a Yankee, Hill was the batter who beaned Pitcher Ed Linke of the Nats with a line drive that bounced off Linke's head back into the mitt of Catcher Jack Redmond, who threw to first base and doubled Ben Chapman off that bag . . . Linke later came up with a mysterious malady that left his pitching hand pulseless and caused his retirement from the game. He traced his troubles to the beaning.

Guidi, Dillard and Ewell Win Their Events at Boston

Boston, Jan. 24 (AP).—Coming off a losing race only 24 hours ago, national titlist George Guida of Villanova, retained his Prout Memorial "600" laurels with a three-yards win over New Yorker Johnny Quigley in 1:13 in the Knights of Columbus track meet tonight before a 12,000 crowd at the Boston Garden.

Five started in this feature and Reggie Pearman of New York University, who bested Guida in a 1000-yard run at Philadelphia, trailed the field. Charlie Slade of Seton Hall Prep, was third and Brown's Royce Crimmin fourth.

Guida took the leade at the first turn and did not appear seriously threatened as Quigley and Crimmin waged an early battle for second honors that the New Yorker regained during the bell lap.

Two other national champions, Harrison Dillard of Baldwin-Wallace, and the veteran Barney Ewell of Lancaster, Pa., prevailed in their hurdling and sprinting specialties.

Dillard breezed in the 45-yard high timber event but Ewell had only inches on Dick Houden of the Illinois A. C., and Joe Cianciabella of Manhattan, in the 50-yard dash. Time for both of those short events was 5.6 seconds.

Sprints favorite Ed Conwell of Jersey City, N. J., who suffered a leg injury during his winning effort at Philadelphia last night, was shut out in his trial heat.

It also was Ewell's second win in as many nights, for he captured the "300" in 32.3 at Philadelphia.

Caps Lead Providence, 63 to 43, in 4th Period

BULLETIN

The Capitols defeated Providence, 69-60.

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

The Washington Captols led the Providence Steamrollers, 63-43, after 2 minutes of the fourth quarter in a Basketball Association of America game before 1311 fans at Uline Arena last night.

Both teams were off to a dull start, but the Caps retained enough of an edge to take the 2-0 lead on a layup by Feerick after 45 seconds. They extended their lead to 24-13 at the end of the quarter.

The Caps and rollers were way off in their passing, and the ball handling but the difference was that John Mahnken, Johnny Norlander and Bones McKinney were controlling both backboards for Washington with surprising ease.

The Caps couldn't pull away by more than four points until with four minutes left in the quarter, they began to click, leading 13-11, the Caps tossed in 11 straight points before George Nostrand stopped the streak with a pivot shot as the period ended.

The Caps' play improved in the second quarter and led by the fine floor play and uncanny one-handed shooting of Fred Scolari, widened their lead to 47-27 before intermission.

By the end of the half, Scolari had tossed in 13 points. The two lads who were keeping the pitiful Providence team in the game were Nostrand and Kenny Sailors.

Nostrand, working in the pivot slot and shooting well with both hands, had registered 12 points. Little Sailors, former University of Wyoming flash, was setting up Nostrand with his stellar ball handling.

The Rollers, showing a little more life in the third period, outscored the Caps, 16-11, to trail, 58 to 47, going into the last quarter.

Sailors began to hit hard for the Rollers in the third stanza. He tacked up seven of the Providence points.

Caps Instruct Boys Tuesday On Set Shots

The shooting stage of The Washington Post-Caps basketball clinics started last Tuesday when some 4000 youngsters were taught how to make free throws, but the real fun—shooting set shots—is on tap for this Thursday night.

Bob Feerick, Freddy Scolari, Bones McKinney, John Norlander, John Mahnken and the entire gang of Cap hotshots will once more visit 10 District public school gymnasiums for the third session of the basketball schools.

This is the class you don't want to miss. The Caps are the best set-shot team in basketball. They'll start the classes rolling by showing you how the various shots, two-handers and one-handers, are made and then you'll go out on the court and try it yourself.

Bear in mind that there's a reward for regular attendance at these classes. Those who show up regularly will be awarded a diploma at the end of the sessions. Also, 50 kids will be selected at Tuesday's classes to be guests of the Caps at Saturday's game between Washington and the league-leading Chicago Stags.

It's all free. The shooting starts at 6:30 p. m., so bring along your tennis shoes and crack down with the gang.

Navy Fencing Coach Dies While Team Is Winning

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 24 (AP).—Members of the Naval Academy fencing team went on with their match against Yale in MacDonough Hall today unaware that their coach had died in the same building of a heart attack.

Louis Deladrier, 62, collapsed and died just after he opened his locker in the coach's room of the building. The match was under way on the floor above.

His widow, Mrs. Marguerite Deladrier, asked that the information be withheld from the Navy team as the match was in progress.

Deladrier, a native of Belgium and head fencing coach at the academy since 1933, shoveled snow from the street in front of his house just after eating lunch in order to drive from his home in Trexton Heights near Annapolis to the gymnasium.

He came to this country in 1922 to become assistant fencing coach at the academy. Prior to that he served 22 years in the Belgian army. In the 15 full seasons he coached, the Navy fencers lost only 7 out of 66 contests and were undefeated six seasons.

Navy and Irish May Be Forced To Shift Game

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 24 (AP).—The 1948 Navy-Notre Dame football game may be played somewhere in the Midwest instead of in Baltimore because of incomplete stadium modernization plans in the Maryland city, Capt. E. B. Taylor, director of Academy athletics, said today.

"There is a question about how much of the Baltimore Stadium will be available during next football season," Taylor reported. "But nothing has been decided.

He said Notre Dame had been advised of the situation, but he had heard nothing from the South Bend authorities.

As to a report the game already had been transferred to Notre Dame, Taylor said it was "complete news to me."

Baltimore is planning to start modernization of its stadium next spring. Present plans call for several thousand seats to be removed as alterations are carried on section by section.

The stadium, which normally seats 53,000, usually is increased to a capacity of more than 60,000 with temporary bleachers for such games as Navy-Notre Dame.

Last year's game was played in Cleveland. The date of this year's game has not been announced, but usually it is played late in October.

Western Ky. Beats St. John's

Philadelphia, Jan. 24 (AP).—Western Kentucky College, sparked by the leaping, twisting shotmaking of big Don Ray, made up a six point half time deficit and then withstood a rally by St. Joseph's College (Philadelphia) to win the opener of a basketball doubleheader, 84-73, before an estimated 9500 at Convention Hall tonight.

Hoyas Beat Texas Wesleyan; G. W. Rolls Over Navy, 54-43

Hot Streak at End Featured by Colonials

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

George Washington finished with a rush to spoil Navy's first basketball visit here, 54-53, last night at the Armory.

Overcoming an eight-point deficit in the second half, the Colonials were sparked in their comeback by Captain Bill Cantwell, Ray (Ace) Adler and Johnny Moffatt.

The heavy storm kept attendance to about 1,000.

Right after intermission, Navy increased its lead to 27-19 and appeared on its way. G. W. stayed with the Middies, though, and when Ray Adler dropped a goal and added a charity toss he cut the lead to 29-26.

Moffatt added a goal and Adler regained the lead for the Colonials when he dropped a shot from the side. Robbins, who at that point had five field goals, interrupted the scoring spree by geting a foul for Navy.

Adler Scores Again

Adler continued his one-man surge, bagging his fourth of the game to make it 32-30, G. W. The rapid-fire exchange continued as the teams swung into the last 10 minutes.

Navy took a 22-17 lead after the first 20 minutes of fast action. Both teams missed some tough rim shots but kept the game at a fast tempo.

The Colonials broke fast with tering baskets to give them a 6-0 Moffatt, Cantwell and Adler regislead. Navy tied it when Searle, Sheehan and Robbins retaliated and the teams swapped points until Robbins dropped two in a row to send Navy in front, 17-14.

Cerra, whose seven points kept G. W. close in the first half, made a foul and field goal near the end to keep Navy from getting too far in front.

Clam-Eater Champ Retains Title After Record Gulping

Seattle, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—World champion clam eater Richard Watson retained his title in the national clam bowl here today but was forced to set a new world record in out-gulping challenger Joseph Silva, of Marthas Vineyard, Mass., 132 to 127, in 10 minutes.

Watson, a Seattle cab driver, bolted to a commanding lead of 15 - 7 at the one-minute point and never was headed by the Eastern soft shell champion.

Using rhythmic wrist action and deft finger work Watson methodically pushed one little neck after another into his bulging cheeks.

Only once did the muscle-jawed Silva threaten to catch up and that was the half-way mark when the official counter announced "Watson 74 — Silva 71."

As the timer called off the final 10 seconds both clamateurs put on frantic finishes. They broke finger nails on the remaining clams which refused to open.

Earlier today a welcoming committee from the Washington State Press Club, sponsors of the coast-to-coast clambake, met Silva at the King st. railroad station and escorted him to a downtown hotel.

"When do we eat?" asked the chunky truck driver as he stepped from the train.

Georgetown (Ky.) Head Dead at 68

Lexington, Ky., Jan. 24 (AP).—Robert Taylor Hinton, 68, president of the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association and dean of Georgetown (Ky.) College, died today.

An outstanding educator, Hinton had been critically ill for several months.

Corley and Kraus Pace 48-37 Upset

In a game about as torrid as the 50-degree temperature at the National Guard Armory yesterday afternoon, Georgetown upset Texas Wesleyan, 48-37.

The heavy snow kept the crowd to less than 500.

Although it wasn't the best-played basketball in the world, the Hoyas had reason to be happily satisfied with the result that gave them an even break in 18 games this season.

The Wesleyans lost a 49-48 decision to well-regarded Long Island U. on Friday night. Then, too, they boasted a 67-40 triumph over a Loyola of New Orleans team that humbled the Hoyas, 65-53.

Kraus, Corley Star

Helping Georgetown gain a measure of revenge were Danny Kraus and Ray Corley, who led the attack with 11 points, each. It was the first time this season that Kraus even tied for high-scoring honors.

Hampered by the slightly frigid atmosphere, the boys even had trouble keeping their hands warm to shoot fouls early in the game.

Georgetown must have been able to keep a bit warmer for the Hoyas gradually forged ahead and walked off at halftime with a 19-12 advantage.

Texas Wesleyan, which now has a 10-5 record, gave an all-around poor shooting exhibition. Although the Fort Worth Rams scored 17 field goals, as many as Georgetown, they converted only three fouls in 16 attempts. And their 17 baskets were made on 83 shots; Georgetown took only 61.

Parham Scores 17 Points

It was Kraus who dropped two quick baskets late in the first half to give Georgetown an 18-10 lead that seemed to bolster the team.

Then, at the start of the second half, Tommy O'Keefe, Ray Corley and then Kraus again came through with twin-pointers that ran the score to 25-14 and just about settled the issue.

Only consistent shooter for the Texans was "Easy" Parham, who wound up with 17 points. Parham was fourth leading scorer in the country last year. About the only one giving him any help was Doug Higgins, who played an excellent floor game and bagged three baskets.

Johnny Inks 4-Year Pact And Connor Joins Him

By Charles Dunkley

Chicago, Jan. 24 (AP).—Johnny Lujack, Notre Dame's famed quarterback, twice consecutively named for All-American honors, today signed a four-year contract to play professional football with the Chicago Bears of the National Football League.

The Bears also signed George Connor, Notre Dame tackle, All-America in 1946, to a three-year contract.

The 22-year-old Lujack reportedly will receive about $85,000—$20,000 a year, plus a $5000 bonus—for affixing his signature.

Rodenberg Happy

Johnny Lujack's signing of a contract with the Chicago Bears of the National Football League yesterday was good news to Bob Rodenberg, president of the Baltimore Colts in the All-America Conference.

"Now we have an excellent chance to get Bobby Layne of Texas," Rodenberg said. "Layne, also owned by the Chicago Bears, has said he doesn't care to be used as trading material by the Bears and he doubts that the Bears can use both Lujack and him."

However, George Halas, owner coach of the Bears, seven times champions of the National League, declined to reveal the exact terms, but said the reported figures "were close."

Hollywood Backdrop

Lujack, a native of Connellsville, Pa., son of a locomotive boilermaker, was named the "Athlete of the Year" in the Associated Press poll for 1947.

The Notre Dame star, possessing the most magic name in football since the days of Harold (Red) Grange a quarter of a century ago, signed with Halas at a party in the fashionable penthouse of the Hotel Sherman in a typical Hollywood setting.

The Pennsylvania youth said he always regarded the Bears as his favorite professional team.

"I've always played with championship teams and it is only natural that on turning professional that I would become associated with the Bears," he said.

$100,000 in Prospect

In his first year of professionalism, Lujack faces the happy prospect of rolling up a $100,000 bankroll. He will join the advisory football staff of a Chicago sporting goods manufacturer and indorse a football on which he will receive royalties. He also is in demand as a paid after-dinner speaker and has been offered a movie contract.

Lujack is expert in directing the swift striking "T" formation offense which he learned at Notre Dame under Coach Frank Leahy, one of the Nation's foremost collegiate exponents of the formation.

Eventually Lujack will supplant Sid Luckman, the Bears aging quarterback star, who served as Lujack's tutor at Notre Dame during two spring practice sessions. Luckman has played nine seasons with the Bears.

Lujack became Notre Dame's first-string quarterback in midseason 1942 when Angelo Bertelli entered the Marines.

Last year Lujack was awarded practically every top honor available for a college athlete. He won the John W. Heisman Trophy, presented annually to the outstanding college football player; the Walter Camp Memorial Trophy, by the Touchdown Club of Washington, D. C., as the outstanding college player of the year; the Detroit Quarterback's Club Trophy, and was voted the most valuable player in the East-West game played January 1 at San Francisco.

Resignation Accepted . . .

McKeever, In Line for Job With Rockets, Quits on Coast

San Francisco, Jan. 24 (AP).—Ed McKeever, head football coach at the University of San Francisco, handed in his resignation today and a member of the USF board of athletic control said it had been "accepted in anticipation."

McKeever, not immediately available for comment, has been reported headed for a coaching position with the Chicago Rockets of the All-American League. His wife told the Associated Press that she had just heard of the resignation and did not know whether her husband had signed with Chicago.

Father Jerome J. Sullivan, S. J., a member of the athletic board, said that the athletic board last Monday talked about the McKeever contract which had two more years to run, and in view of his "shopping around," voted "unanimously to accept the resignation when presented."

The USF board will meet tomorrow, the priest said, and at that time the matter of a successor will be discussed.

He said there were several possibilities and that Joe Kuharich, an assistant under McKeever, was a definite possibility.

McKeever returned yesterday from Chicago, where it was reported he had signed with the Chicago Rockets, but McKeever told the Associated Press yesterday that he had not signed.

His Job If He Wants It

Chicago, Jan. 24 (AP).—Ed McKeever, who resigned today as head football coach at the University of San Francisco, can have the Chicago Rockets' coaching job, "if he wants it," R. E. Garn, representative of the All-America Conference club, said tonight.

American Girl Wins Ski Tuneup

Pontresina, Switzerland, Jan. 24 (AP).—Andrea Mead, a 15-year-old schoolgirl from Rutland, Vt., upheld American prestige today by winning the women's downhill race in pre-Olympic ski competition. Stein Eriksen of Norway won the men's race with the best United States performance being a fourth place finish by Steve Knowlton of Aspen, Colo.

However, the results were unofficial and a United States protest, registered against the timing of the races, kept the Pontresina Ski Club officials in session until late tonight.

A spokesman of the club said the official placings and times might not be issued until tomorrow when the championships continue with men's and women's slalom and jumping.

Worsham Shoots 65 For 141 Total

Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 24 (AP).—Jim Demaret of Ojai, Calif., today retained the lead in the $10,000 Phoenix Open Golf tournament, touring the Phoenix Country Club course in 33-33—66 for a 36-hole total of 131.

The leading money winner of 1947, Demaret entered the day's play tied for leadership with Bobby Locke, Johannesburg, South Africa, and Jim Ferrier, transplanted Australian now playing out of San Francisco, each with 65.

Locke, fighting a balky putter, wound up with a 2-under-par 69 and finished tied for second place with Lloyd Mangrum of Chicago, a scant stroke ahead of E. J. (Dutch) Harrison of Little Rock, Ark.

Worsham Gets 65

National Open Champ Lew Worsham of Washington, D. C., had a much better round than his 76 of yesterday, finishing with a 65 after his putter got hot.

His two-day total was 141, 10 strokes off the pace.

Chandler Harper of Portsmouth, Va., had a 71-70—141 and Otto Greiner of Baltimore, 71-71—142.

Roberto de Vicenzo, Buenos Aires, Argentina, turned in a smooth 65 today to go with his 71 in the opening round and tie him at 136 with Leland Gibson, Kansas City, Mo. John Palmer, Baden, N. C., and George Schneiter, Ogden, Utah, finished at 137.

Ferrier Hits Trouble

Ferrier ran into serious trouble on the front nine and came in with a 2-over-par 73 to finish at 138 with Ben Hogan, cofavored with Locke, Frank Stranahan, Toledo (Ohio) law amateur; Skip Alexander, Lexington, N. C.; Toney Penna, Cincinnati, Ohio; Stan Leonard, Vancouver, B. C., and Sam Snead, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

Landon Booters Are Undefeated In 24 Games Over Three Years

IN ALMOST any other city, a 24-game winning streak by a schoolboy team would be heralded by streamer headlines, special radio interviews, banquets, and so forth.

But in Washington such a string posted by the Landon School soccer team has gone almost unnoticed.

Reason is that Washington has never been soccer-conscious. It has no professional or college soccer teams. Besides Landon, only four local high schools compete in soccer.

However, that does not detract from the brilliant record of the Brown Bear booters.

Because, during the past two years, the Bears have won two Interstate Athletic Conference and two Washington private high championships. Among their victims have been St. Albans, Georgetown Prep, Sidwell Friends and Priory in Washington, St. James of Hagerstown and Bladensburg in Maryland and Sanford Prep in Middleton, Del.

When they take the field next Tuesday against St. Albans, they will be entering their third year without a defeat.

There is no immediate sign that the Landon streak will end. With almost an entire all-senior line-up, the Bears have won their first three games this season, scoring 15 joints to none for their foes. With seven games still on the slate, chances are good that the skein will stretch to 31.

Out-of-town soccer enthusiasts are calling the Landon aggregation one of the best in the East. Among the Bears' boosters is Buck Davidson, prominent Eastern soccer referee, who says, "I'd stack the Landon outfit against any I've seen."

Landon's coach, Harry Prindle, former Duke star, has planned a stronger schedule for next season in an effort to gain further recognition for his boys.

Among those on the list are the Navy Plebes, Haverford, Pa., College frosh, University of Maryland frosh and Mount St. Joseph's, Baltimore's interscholastic champ for the past two years.

During the past few years, Landon had gained the reputaground in this area for college soccer stars. Among those who have made the jump from Landon to college ranks are Ev Wilson at Dartmouth, Rex Gygax at the Naval Academy and Layne Holman and Godfrey Crowe at West Point.

Best college prospects on this year's team are Center-Halfback Paul Thompson, 6-foot 2-inch, 195-pound senior, who is headed for the Naval Academy, and Goalie Polk Wright, sophomore who has held Landon's opponents scoreless in all three 1948 games.

HERB HEFT

Tom McBride, 3 Rookies Sign Nat Contracts

The Nats passed the .500 mark yesterday in the number of players who have accepted terms for 1948.

The signed contracts of Outfielders Tom McBride and Dale Stafford and Pitchers Buzz Dozier and Earl Davis were received in yesterday's mail, bringing to 19 the number of financially contented athletes.

Washington's spring training roster, released yesterday, lists 35 players who will be inspected by Manager Joe Kuhl & Co. at Orlando, Fla.

McBride was purchased last spring from the Boston Red Sox and batted .269. He alternated in leftfield with Joe Grace, since sold to the Pirates, and Sherry Robertson.

Stafford, Dozier and Davis are rookies. Dozier, 6-foot-3 righthander, was signed by Scout Joe Cambria last August. The 18-year-old Texan made his debut in organized ball with the Nats, joining the club shortly after graduation from high school.

Stafford comes up from the Greenville team of the Texas State League where he batted .378. He bats righthanded. Davis, a southpaw, pitched for Washington's Charlotte farm team last year, winning one and losing five.

Among the key Nats unsigned are First Baseman Mickey Vernon, Shortstop Mark Christman, Pitchers Walter Masterson and Mickey Heafner, Catcher Al Evans and Outfielder Buddy Lewis.

Levin, Morgan Meet On Next Mat Card

Former wrestling champion Dave Levin will meet Big Ben Morgan in the feature bout at Turner's Arena Wednesday night.

In a supporting bout, Bert Hellion will face Don Lee.

Mount St. Mary's, Our Apologies

In last Tuesday's edition of The Washington Post, a story concerning the Catholic University-Mount St. Mary's basketball game stated that a Mount St. Mary's fan threw a dead herring at the referee when the official called a close one in C. U.'s favor.

Of this, the Rev. James P. Diamond, director of athletics at Mount St. Mary's, says, "There is no question about the fish being thrown, but the 'culprit' was not a Mountaineer."

The Washington Post regrets having placed the blame on a Mount St. Mary's fan.

Davis Cup Juniors Bet Big, Report

New York, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—Charges that members of the Junior Davis Cup squad bet on matches, gambled among themselves and received lavish expense accounts for competing in various tournaments were revealed today at the annual meeting of the United States Lawn Tennis Association. The squad is made up of promising players under 18.

The accusations were disclosed in a report by Dr. S. Ellsworth Davenport, jr., of New York, chairman of the Junior Davis Cup committee.

He said that officials in various sections reported to him that in many instances the youngsters had been betting on matches other than the ones in which they competed and were gambling "beyond their means" among themselves.

He said the committee also had received unconfirmed reports that the outstanding youngsters were being offered sums in excess of actual expense money to compete in various tournaments.

The offers were said to have come from the clubs staging the tournaments. But Davenport emphasized that efforts to obtain proof of the offers had been in vain.

Davenport cautioned against such practices.

The matter of expense accounts also figured in the report of the amateur rules committee. Read by the retiring president, Holcombe Ward, it stressed that tournament officials "should not ignore" the reports of too lavish expense accounts and revealed that all players of tournament ability had been cautioned about expenses.

Wound Healed . . .

Ehrhardt Comes Back To Redskins

After a one-year layoff while his war wounds were healing, Clyde Ehrhardt, outstanding center of the 1946 season, will rejoin the Washington Redskins for the 1948 campaign.

Ehrhardt's signed contract was received by mail yesterday, bringing to seven the number of players signed by the local pro gridders. Others are Veterans Sammy Baugh and Ki Aldrich and Rookies Harry Gilmer, Weldon Edwards, Floyd Lawhorn and Art Pollard.

Drafted in 1944 by the 'Skins, Ehrhardt went directly from the University of Georgia into the Army, where he was decorated for valor in the Battle of the Bulge and in the Rhineland. He was shot in the lung in the latter engagement.

Although only partially recuperated, Clyde played a brilliant part in 10 of the Redskins' 11 games in 1946, but then was advised by doctors to take a year off. During 1947 the 6-foot-1 husky, weighing 235 pounds, worked as a movie projectionist and theater manager in Hartwell, Ga.

Coach Turk Edwards yesterday announced Ehrhardt would be used as a center on offense, and as a guard and fullback on defense.

Army, Manhattan Tie:

Four Meet Marks Shattered In Fifth West Point Relays

West Point, N. Y., Jan. 24 (AP).—Four meet marks were broken at the Fifth Annual West Point Relays today as more than three hundred athletes representing 18 colleges vied for individual honors.

Army, the host team, and Manhattan shared honors, each winning two events.

The Cadets won the first head of the 1200 in the record-breaking time of 2:08.9, knocking off more than two seconds from the previous mark of 2:10.2 set by a Cadet quartet last year. The Cadet four, which led all the way, consisted of Ed Wagner, Ed Mastaglio, Charlie Nash and John Hammack. As expected they captured the final although in somewhat slower clocking.

Making up 10 yards on the anchor leg, Hammack, brilliant Cadet quarter-miler and Olympic prospect, turned in another superlative effort in the anchor leg of the 2400 to help set a new meet record in the event of 4 minutes 55 seconds. His 1:11 for the 600 was considered outstanding.

Jim Cavanaugh, Manhattan's fleet miler, turned in a 4:24.2 clocking in the Special Mile Run in the best individual effort of the day. He broke the record set by Jim Flinter, also of Manhattan, last year.

The Manhattan hurdling quartet captured the 340-yard shuttle hurdle special in the meet record time of 31 seconds flat. Tom Byrnes, Bill Drew, Don Sullivan and Phil Sullivan and Phil Einesman collaborated in breaking their own mark of 31.7 seconds of last year.

Episcopal Wins Over Gilman

Baltimore, Jan. 24 (AP).—Episcopal high withstood a late rally to nose out Gilman, 34-32, here today as the team from Alexandria, Va., hung up its fourth basketball win in six starts.

After trailing 25-24 at the end of the third period, Episcopal forged ahead 32-27 with three minutes remaining. Gilman closed the gap to two points, but a basket from underneath by Henry Schacht sewed up the contest.

Delegate Wins Hialeah 'Cap; Armed Scratched

Against Williams

Stonewall Has Tough Fight Tomorrow

If Stonewall Jackson of Washington fame is still standing after his battle with Johnny Williams of New York at Turner's Arena tomorrow night, the local lightweight must be rated as one of the city's better boxing prospects.

Beaten in only one of his 25 pro fights, Jackson has never been called upon to meet the opposition Williams is capable of providing. Williams, handled by Chris Dundee, is one of the East's most highly regarded lightweights. He convinced Washington patrons of his ability several weeks ago when he fashioned a decisive victory over Herbie Jones.

Williams' list of victims includes Roberto Proietti, Italian lightweight king, and Roman Alvarez, a Madison Square Garden performer until Williams did a job on him.

Although he'll be at least a 2-1 favorite, Williams' task won't be an easy one. Young Jackson is a hard-hitting, hard-to-hit flailer who is capable of disposing of his opponent with one punch. Stonewall has never backtracked, but he may have to shift his tactics against Williams, an aggressive fellow himself who packs a hefty wallop in either fist.

The bout is booked for nine rounds, the route being a compromise between the 10 rounds Williams wanted and the eight Jackson demanded.

Toby Reed of Baltimore and Kid Cravotti will meet in a five-round semiwindup. In four-rounders, Jackie Ford will box Billy Unk, Kid Ferris will take on Jackie Thornton, John Hansbury will box Jerome Pratt and Sam Jefferson will take on Georgie Brooks.

Exterminator's Trainer Dies

Miami, Fla., Jan. 24 (AP).—Henry McDaniel, 80, one of turfdom's great trainers, died early today in a hospital in nearby Coral Gables after a brief illness.

McDaniel's most famous horse was Exterminator which he persuaded Willis Sharp Kilmer to buy as a "work horse" for Sun Brier on the eve of the Kentucky Derby in 1918 when it appeared that Sun Brier would break down.

Exterminator won and went on to become one of the greatest American-foaled thoroughbreds of all time.

Atkinson Up On Woolford Ace in Mud

By Fred Hayden

Hialeah, Fla., Jan. 24 (AP).—With the famed Armed and Faultless scratched and Buzfuz hoisting the distress signal after gaining an early lead, Delegate plowed through mud to an easy conquest in today's Palm Beach Handicap.

Flying the silks of the Woolford Farm, nom de course of Kansas City department store magnate Herbert M. Woolf, Delegate completed the 7-furlong trip two lengths on top with the pacemaking pilot, popular Ted Atkinson, in the saddle.

The Bermill Farm's Bug Juice was second in the field of six, three length before Let's Dance. The latter and Buzfuz represented the Miami-owned Sunshine Stable of Dan Chappell and Mose Rauzin and ruled a slight favorite over the $5.80-for-$2 victor.

Takes Down $7950

A throng estimated at 17,500, most of them prepared for showers which threatened from morning hours on, saw Delegate take down the $7950 first share of the $10,000 added stakes. The chestnut gelding was teletimed in 1:24 2/5.

The Calumet Farm camp scratched Faultless this morning and then, in the afternoon, also withdrew Armed. Trainer Jimmy Jones did not relish having 7-year-old Armed, assigned 130 pounds, attempt to spot from 8 to 20 pounds to fast sprinters in an effort to beat them at their own game over a track so rough and tough. Thus the glamour gelding's earnings remained at $767,700, second only to world leader Stymie's $816,060.

Tavistock also declined the issue in the main event.

Won Inaugural

Delegate, in his previous outing, won the Hialeah Inaugural Handicap in front of Buzfuz, and repeated today despite a six-pound weight shift favoring The Buzzer. Delegate now holds three decisions over Buzfuz in their four clashes this winter. He also captured the Gulfstream Inaugural Cap.

Al Snider, seeking a riding triple, had Buzfuz away in front, but the speedy Ellis quickly passed the topweight favorite, gaining more than a length lead in the first quarter mile. Atkinson, destined to chalk up his fourteenth victory of the 8-day-old meeting, had Delegate heads apart, with the improved Let's Dance behind the front pair.

MAAA Distributes Donated Boxing Gloves

The Metropolitan Amateur Athletic Association, Inc., plans immediate distribution of the boxing gloves donated by Turner's Arena matchmaker Gabe Menendez.

Member clubs will use the equipment to train for the association's show at Turner's, February 10.

St. John's Plays Gonzaga

Gonzaga and St. John's clash today at 3 o'clock in the National Guard Armory in the game that determines the first-half Catholic high basketball championship.

The Cadets, who have won eight out of nine games this season, go into the game slight favorites over the Eagles, who have won six out of eight.

Victims of the Cadets have been Priory, the Alumni, Coolidge, Devitt Prep, Wilson, La Salle of Cumberland, Md.; St. Anthony's and Georgetown Prep. The only team to lick St. John's was Mount St. Joseph's of Baltimore, 36-35.

Teams conquered by Gonzaga are Sidwell Friends, twice, and Charlotte Hall, Georgetown Prep, Bladensburg and Devitt Prep, once each. Anacostia and Roosevelt hold the only wins over Gonzaga.

Today's game promises to be a scoring duel between Jack George of St. John's against Jack Spicer of Gonzaga. Each has a 14-point-a-game average.

George will be backed up by Tom Fannon, Billy Martins, Vince Durkin and George Kokes. Helping set up Spicer will be Joe Conlon, Jack Larkins, Tom DeVeau and Johnny Hogan.

Bowling

Due to the snowstorm, the big March of Dimes bowling match between all-star teams from the War Department and Navy Department leagues scheduled last night at the Penn Recreation alleys has been postponed until next Saturday.

Co-chairman Johnny Parise and Dick Dunaj announced the entire program and lineups of teams as originally scheduled would prevail on Saturday. All proceeds will go to the March O'-Dimes Fund.

The Tenth Annual "Chilly" Barnard Open Handicap tournament won last year by Charlie Patterson is the big feature today and tonight at the Lafayette alleys, with competition starting at 2 o''clock. Entrance fee will be $5.00. Six games, with a scratch of 130, a two-thirds handicap and 15-pin limit will prevail.

Among other big events coming up in the near future are the 14th Annual "Reds" MeGaw Open scheduled next Saturday at Ed Goldberg's Clarendon alleys and the Seventh Annual Men's Brookland Handicap here next Sunday. The MeGaw bowling is being staged in honor of the veteran manager of the Almas Temple bowling alleys, who is regarded as one of the District's all-time duckpin greats.

Roosevelt No. 1, Building Trades No. 2 and Barry No. 1 are the leaders in the three sections of the American Legion bowling leagues.

CYO, Kavakos Play at Armory

Trotters Now Harnessed:

Sports Await Signal For Building Boom

By Walter Haight

IN TROTTING around trying to find out what's doing with Maryland's carriage trade—the fellows who promised us harness racing with all the trimmings this year I ran smack into an angle affecting many sports.

To you, the date of Feb. 29, 1948, probably has little significance, but to many sports promoters, both in and out of business, the day is of utmost importance.

The odd 24 hours, tacked on the end of February each four years, is the last day under present law for the Housing and Rent Act which carries with it Part 812. This section deals with construction limitations—scarce building materials, etc — blocking many sports projects.

Although the boys who cover The Hill say the continuation of rent control is a 2-to-5 shot, they also report it's even money or more that Part 812 will be dropped, due to an easing of shortages.

This would present the go signal to a long list of sports building, lined up under current law from "Athletic Field House" through the alphabet to "Table Tennis Establishment."

I VISITED the other afternoon with James Martin, in charge of non-residential construction for Housing Expediter Tighe Wood. Brother Martin and his colleagues pass on the issuance of permits for improvements and building along sports and amusement lines.

I learned only one of the three Maryland harness tracks have applied for a permit—Laurel Raceway. The others—Oxon Hill and Ocean City—it seems, are awaiting the results from this feeler. Marlboro, by the way, has an application filed.

I was surprised to learn how little could hold up so much. For instance, the list of restricted material, at first glance, doesn't seem important.

The law, in part, reads: "An application for a construction permit will be approved if the proposed work will require no scarce building materials such as cast iron press pipe and fittings; cast iron soil pipe, electrical service equipment and wiring devices, galvanized sheet steel, gypsum board and lath, hardwood flooring, millwork, nails, plywood, steel and wrought iron pipe and water closet bowls and tanks."

BOLTS, screws and dowels (wooden pegs driven into holes) are O. K., but nails are out.

Brother Martin told me of a fellow who was building a midget auto racing track in the Midwest. Nails were his big obstacle. When someone mentioned dowels, he yelled, "I'll dowel the whole thing. I wasn't in the Seabees for three years for nothing." He did it, too, I'm told.

A harness track at Foxboro, Mass., got around the law by buying a Government building and knocking it down for materials. However, it isn't Kosher to buy second and stuff, say from a dealer.

Buildings of stands for sports are banned, although some improvements to insure safety have been allowed. Hialeah in Florida finally got a permit for bleachers after five tries. Success came after the flood of last Summer when the stands were condemned. Sam McCormick, of Hialeah, shipped in a part of the old bleachers to prove his point.

FOR HEALTH and safety sake, a few permits have been issued. Tanforan and Churchill Downs, both tracks that figured in penalties before, were allowed to build fire escapes, etc. when so ordered by State authorities.

How come Atlantic City, Monmouth Park and Lincoln Downs were able to build postwar tracks?

To that question, Brother Martin brought out that construction was started in the few months between congressional actions—the fall and early winter of 1945. Any building under way at that time was allowed to be completed.

After February 29, it might be legal once more to slam a finger with a hammer.

Until then, however, it's "Brother, can you spare a nail?"

And the U. S. answer generally is—"no!"

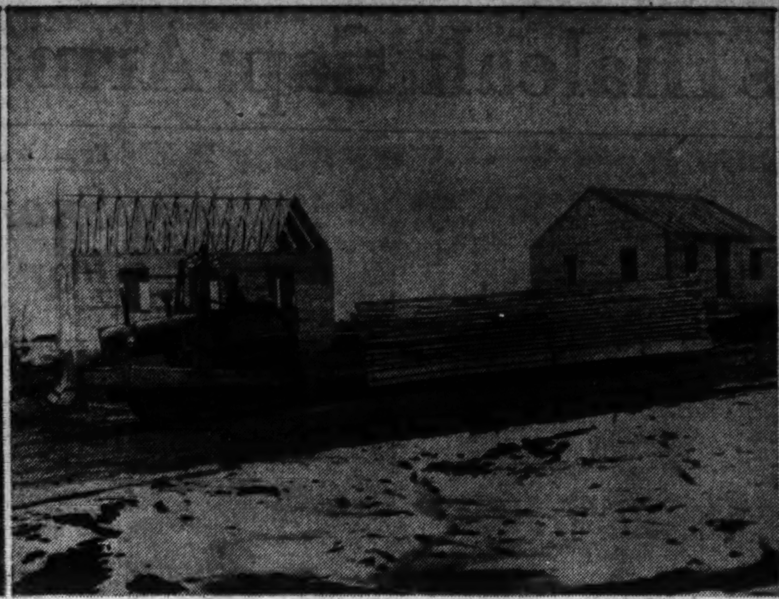
Entire wall sections are built in this immense on-site prefabrication shop at Viers Mill Village project in nearby Montgomery County, Md. All crews work indoors in inclement weather, outdoors in good weather



Wall sections are loaded on sleds, pulled by tractors to housing site. Foundations have already been laid. Sections are cut to fit exactly when carpenter crews erect them, eliminating on-site sawing Subflooring has been laid. Eight-man crew pushes wall section into place. Entire frame of house can be erected in a matter of minutes. Projects employs union labor, one of few such jobs in D. C. area.

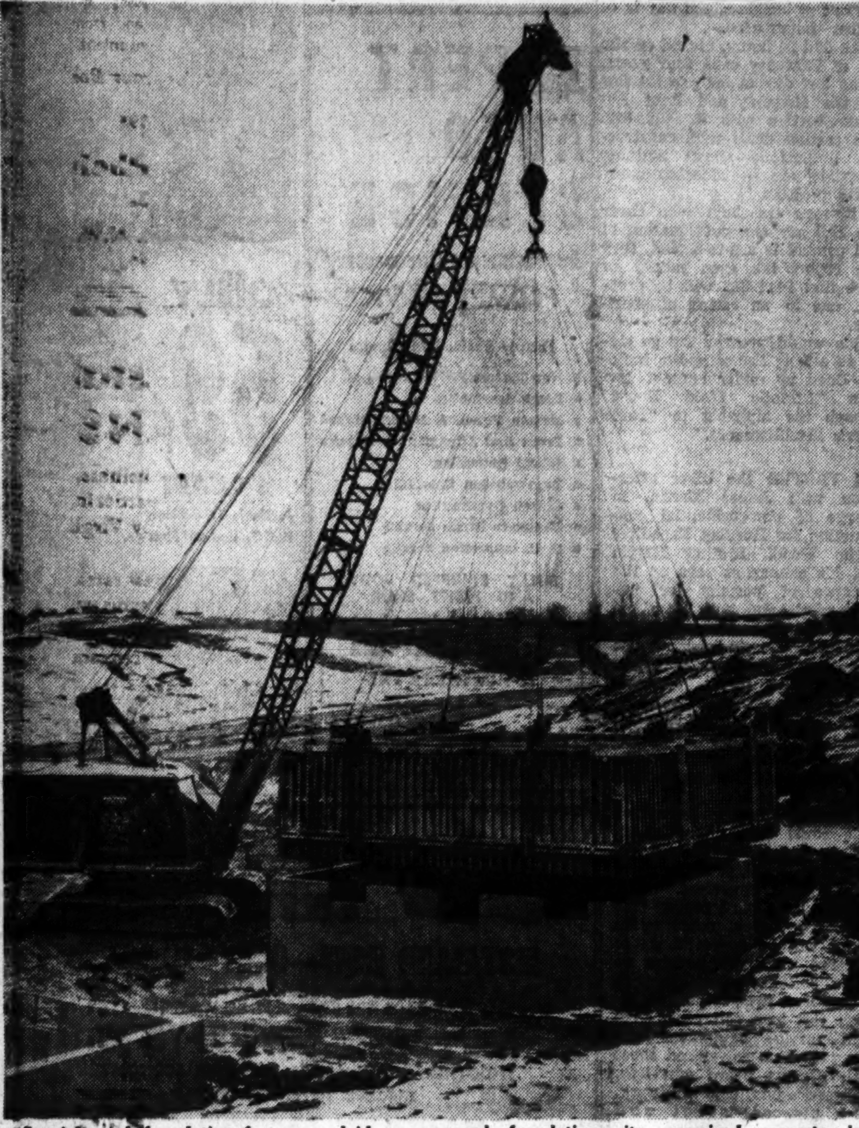
Weather's a Nuisance but Work Continues at Viers Mill Project



Special steel foundation forms are laid on proposed foundation site, premixed concrete is poured. Huge crane lifts entire form after concrete has set. Five foundations per day are now being laid. Builders expect to complete 10 per day when warm weather arrives. Steel forms are electrically equipped for night operations

By Conrad P. Harness

OLD MAN WINTER is the top man on the Washington housing front today. Production schedules have become useless pieces of paper due to recent snows and freezing temperatures. Many builders are enjoying a well-earned rest. Others are planning homes for spring construction.

The saw and hammer symphony is perhaps loudest at the large Viers Mill Village project in nearby Montgomery County, where construction crews are working outdoors every day weather permits, and indoors at other times.

Around 200 homes are under way in the proposed 1400-home development, situated on 330 acres of former farmland between Wheaton and Rockville, Md., on Viers Mill rd. The builders, Haris Construction Co., expect to complete the entire community by next winter.

Homes Criticized

THE development was recently attacked by Brooke Johns, president of the Montgomery County Board of Commissioners, who charged the project would deteriorate into "a slum area in five to seven years."

The charges were heatedly denied by Harold Strauss, secretary of the construction firm, who claimed his company would make only a "slim profit." He challenged Johns "or anyone else" to compare the new community "with the current cost of other homes."

On December 3, 1947, a neighboring landowner who proposes a country club subdivision nearby, asked the Montgomery County commissioners to halt construction of the low-cost project.

Nathan Goodman, 6817 Georgia ave. nw., who said he owned 280 acres about a mile from Viers Mill Village, charged the project would lower values in his proposed subdivision.

At that time Commissioner Wesley I. Sauter said the commission was "powerless" to stop the project "even if it wanted to," adding that "it would be a violation of the Constitution to order a man to build a certain size house as long as it conforms to building and health regulations."

$8700 Is Price

FINAL prices for the homes will be set after the Veterans' Administration completes its appraisal Myron Ivey, sales manager for Colonial Investment Co., sales agents, estimated the price would be in the $8700-$8850 bracket.

The Government, through its FHA mortgage insurance, has aided in construction to the tune of $7700 per house in insured construction loans.

Using his loan guarantee under the GI bill, a veteran would need no cash down payment, other than usual settlement charges, and could handle the monthly payments for around $57, including taxes, insurance and payment on principal and interest over 25 years.

There are very few new homes being erected in this area today priced at less than $10,000. Ivey predicted his firm would have no trouble selling the homes. "We won't have to sell them. All we'll do is take orders."

The house is a four-room bungalow with full basement. Exterior is of asbestos shingles. It has two medium-sized bedrooms, bath, living room and kitchen. Gas hot-air heat is used. Floors are hardwood, except the kitchen and bath, which are asphalt tile. A small apartment-size stove, 6-cubic-foot refrigerator and ample kitchen cabinets are included. Ceiling and exterior walls are insulated.

Model Home Planned

WALLS are of "dry wall" construction. Gypsum wallboard is nailed to interior studs, the joints are sealed and wallpaper is applied. There are no interior "bearing" walls. The roof's weight rests on the exterior walls.

Lots are an average of 55 by 130 feet and will be sodded and landscaped. A furnished model home is expected to be opened for inspection next week, Ivey stated.

Homes are all alike in basic design, but vary in color of asbestos shingles, roofs, addition of dummy dormer windows and porch canopies. Streets will be paved and curbs and gutters completed.

A tour of the project revealed one of the most elaborate on-site prefabrication plants in operation in the country. An immense covered, winterized shed houses numerous saws, jigs and work crews who produce the walls, stairs, gables, dormers, porches and other wooden sections of the homes.

The entire operation is designed for fast, efficient construction of houses on a production line basis. Each man is assigned one task and does only that. There are no "all-around" carpenters who do framing, trim, hang doors, etc., as is the case on smaller projects. They specialize on only one job and do it expertly.

Cement foundations are laid using large steel forms into which premixed concrete is poured. The finished basement is guaranteed to be waterproof. When the concrete has set, forms are loosened and large cranes lift them to the next site. At peak of construction, 10 homes per day will be ready for occupancy, a spokesman declared. Five foundations per day are now being laid.

1000 Summer Workers

SCOPE OF THE project is revealed by the number of employes. Around 300 are now on the payroll. Over 1000 will work at the development during the summer months, it was predicted.

A complete concrete plant has been set up at one end of the 330-acre tract, formerly known as the Selfridge Farm. Huge stockpiles of lumber and other materials dot the landscape. Large barns house layers of doors, kitchen cabinets and other scarce millwork.

Sigmund Sommers, construction manager, stated the firm had experienced no material shortages. Most items were stockpiled months ago and purchased in carload lots.

Construction will be on a 24-hour basis as soon as weather permits, he declared. Large portable searchlights are already in operation. Each steel foundation form used in pouring con-

Typical home will sell for $8700. Sod and shrubbery are still to be added. A Montgomery civic leader charged that builders would make thousands of dollars profit per house. Builders say profit will run around $500 per dwelling

Hecht's Plans Big Addition To Warehouse

The construction of five additional stories to a section of its New York ave. n.e., warehouse will add 130,000 square feet of space to The Hecht Co.'s storage and delivery facilities, Charles B. Dulcan, sr., vice president and general manager, has announced.

Work has already begun on the new section and completion is expected within the next six months. The present six-story structure contains 350,000 square feet.

The new part of the warehouse will be constructed of glass brick and reinforced concrete. It is being erected on the section fronting on Oakie and Fenwick sts. ne. Two 10,000-pound capacity freight elevators are to be installed.

James L. Parsons, jr., of Washington, is the general contractor and Abbott, Merkt & Co. of New York City, the architects.

The new warehouse addition will cost $600,000.

Southern Hills Adds Sections

Two new sections of Southern Hills apartments will be erected at Third and Fourth sts. se., providing 160 new apartments for veterans. The project is backed by mortgage insurance approved by the local FHA office.

Both sections will be built by M. Rodman, Nathan Siegel, Irwin Geiger and Max Wertheimer, financed by Union Central Life Insurance Co. Section 2 will be financed with a $657,900 mortgage, and will contain 85 apartments.

Section 3 will be financed with a $581,400 mortgage and will contain 75 units. The building will be two and three stories high.

The project brings to 118 the total of veterans multi-family rental housing projects approved by the local FHA office, James A. Hewitt, director said. They provide 11,853 new dwelling units financed with FHA-insured mortgages in excess of $90,207,000.

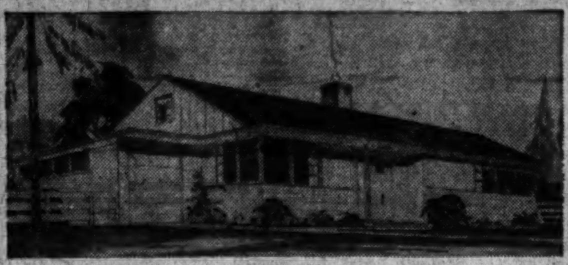
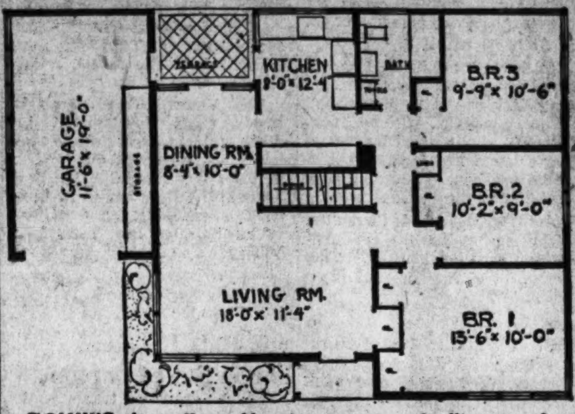
No Traffic Problem





SOLVING the traffic problem in a one-story dwelling was the task assumed by Walter T. Anicha, architect, of Ann Arbor, Mich., in designing this compact house, which he considers the answer for many home-seekers who want three bedrooms on one floor. Sleeping quarters are lined up on one side with logically placed "traffic lanes" offering access to bath, kitchen and living room from center hall. Exterior is accented by dark asphalt shingles above vertical and horizontal white siding. Cost, exclusive of land, is estimated between $10,000 and $12,000.

Warning Is Given On Salt, Petroleum Base Anti-Freeze

Antifreeze solutions with a salt or petroleum base are harmful to automobile engines, the Keystone Automobile Club of Washington warned motorists yesterday.

Quoting reports of the United States Bureau of Standards and the club's Philadelphia office, Manager Ernest Brett said salt-base products corrode engine jackets, solder in radiators and aluminum used in some manifold pumps.

Although petroleum-base fluids do not attack metal parts, they can "ruin radiator hose connections in three weeks and may constitute a fire hazard," Brett pointed out.

Millions Spent

Face Lifting Of Offices Under Way

A Nation-wide trend toward modernization of office buildings, at a cost of millions of dollars, is revealed by a survey just completed by the National Association of Building Owners and Managers.

A total of $38,445,200 for "face lifting" operations has been reported by 338 owners and managers of office buildings. The 338 returns represent between 25 and 30 per cent of the rentable floor space in the Association's membership, or 15 to 20 per cent of the total in the United States.

Typical comment by building managers is "This work is being done in 100 per cent occupied buildings. The purpose is to keep them that way."

"Window dressing"—improvement of the appearance as well as the operation of buildings—looms large in the modernization programs reported. Elevator projects account for $12,979,727, or almost one-third of the total figure; work on lobbies, corridors, etc., for $5,426,495, or about one-seventh of the total; and lighting and electrical projects, for $4,139,630, slightly less than one-tenth of the reported total.

An upswing in the use of air conditioning also is indicated. Projects totaling $5,715,062 have been reported in the survey.

Roof repairs, remodeling of store fronts, and other types of exterior renovation for the reporting buildings are expected to reach $3,852,234; work on heating equipment, $1,093,720, on plumbing and toilets, $1,032,593; and on acoustical projects, $637,310 of the total of modernization work reported to the association.

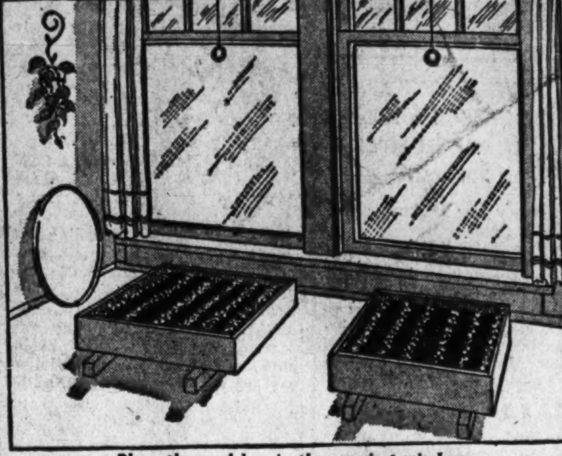
Southside Windows Are Best

House Plants Helped By Mirror, Winter Sun

THE GARDENER



Place the seed box in the sunniest window

When seeds are started in the home, the factor most likely to limit their growth is light. As soon as sprouts emerge from the soil the seed box should be placed where they will get all the sunlight possible.

Even a day's delay may result in the plants growing tall and "spindly," bending toward whatever light may reach them, seeking for more. When light is adequate, the plants will grow fairly straight and stocky, which is to be desired.

The sunlight that comes through window glass is satisfactory for plants, if there is enough of it. A window on the south side is always best, since it enjoys more hours of direct sun, and the strongest light even on cloudy days.

It is practical to supplement sunlight with artificial light and this method is commonly practiced by florists, who are able to make chrysanthemums flower in any month desired by controlling the amount of light that reaches them.

Fluorescent lamps, which have high light value with low temperatures, may be placed a foot above the seed box. At this distance, with 40-watt tubes in a reflector, 15 hours of light a day is sufficient to grow healthy seedlings, without any other light. As a supplement to daylight, burning the light all night should be sufficient.

Ordinary mazda lamps can be used, but these must be placed at a sufficient height above flats to avoid raising the temperature unduly. Place them as close to the flat as jossible, so long as the night temperature does not rise above 60 degrees. By leaving the lights on all night a substantial addition to the available sunlight will be provided.

Taxes Blamed For Zooming Housing Costs

Philadelphia, Jan. 24.—Taxes on new homes amount to one fourth of the sales price, Hobart G. Brady, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, said last night.

BRADY

Furthermore, he added, most people don't realize taxes have raised the cost of housing.

Speaking at the annual banquet of the Philadelphia Real Estate Board, he told a large audience that as Government costs soared, less money would be available for housing. "How much housing are we willing to sacrifice in exchange for added services of Government?" he asked.

Brady listed a five-point program designed to provide better housing for lower income groups. He said the low income workers must strive for a better standard of living, building crafts must assume responsibility for eliminating obsolete processes and restrictive practices and builders must erect better homes with longer usage.

Bankers, he continued, must continue to loan money at rates attractive to home ownership.

"Overcrowding in housing was less last year than in 1940. If nothing happens to interrupt the present volume of housing construction the emergency phase of the housing problem will ease materially," he declared.

Realty Round-Up

HOUSING IN THE NEWS: J. Garrett Beitzell has found that a job well done calls for another. Beitzell, chairman of the Home Builders Association's membership committee in 1947, which obtained 107 new members, has been reappointed to the same job for 1948. "This was such an outstanding job," said President Clarence Gosnell, "that it would be impossible to find a better membership chairman than Mr. Beitzell . . . Drury Realty Corp., now in its seventy-fourth year, has announced the reelection of Nathan Poole as president. The sales force has been augmented by the recent return of Helen E. Warren . . . The Housing Institute, discussing rent control, sees little chance of congressional enactment for any of the following proposals: To control rents for two more years; to invest greater enforcement power in OHE; to lift all rent control now; to put control back on hotels; to grant an across-the-board boost. Best chance for enactment, it says, is a proposal encouraging further liberalization of hardship provisions.

BEITZELL

Master Builders Association, the recognized employer representative in collective bargaining negotiations with most local building unions, has elected the following officers and directors for 1948: George C. Martin, president; Joseph F. Nebel, first vice president; George L. Dyer, second vice president; F. H. Martell, John Scharf, Edwin L. Davis, James R. Skinker, George W. Lipscomb and William E. Cramer, directors.

FHA Commissioner Franklin D. Richards, in a statement released yesterday, said the real challenge to builders is to provide lower-cost housing for the modest income group. Richards said he felt that 1948 volume might well exceed the record year of 1947 in the housing field if the building industry would tailor its product to the price the average American family could afford to pay.

American Savings and Loan Institute's annual midwinter conference is set for New Orleans, February 12-14. Over 200 delegates are expected . . . Waverly Taylor, local builder, has been chosen for a three-year term as trustee of the Urban Land Institute . . . Financing must be tough in Florida; a hotel built at $300,000 in the '20s was recently sold for one million dollars; but the new owners couldn't boost the first mortgage one penny over the old $125,000 figure.

PERSONALS: John D. Marsh of John D. Marsh & Associates, and Henry W. Heine of Hudson Supply & Equipment Co., will be guests of Paul T. Stone, local builder, at Stone's lodge near Lynchburg, S. C., this weekend. The group plans to get in a lot of quail hunting.

Joint Congressional Committee on Housing has issued a report on the high cost of housing. They found a lot of reasons—185 pages worth.

NEW HOUSES in 1948 were the subject of widespread local estimates, predictions, new plans and construction jobs in the first few days of the new year, the National Association of Real Estate Board's "Market Comment" reports.

Los Angeles builders surveyed the population influx to their area and calculated that they will have to build 5800 new houses per month just to take care of the new arrivals. Production must mount higher than this to replace obsolete housing and more than 16,000 temporary dwellings in the area.

A checkup in the New York City area indicated that the 1948 rate of home production will show a sharp acceleration.

Construction began on the first of 172 new homes in North Miami. A new million-dollar 12-story cooperative apartment building was announced in Miami. It will go up on a site leased for 99 years at aggregate rentals estimated at one million dollars. University of Illinois trustees are preparing to ask for bids on a two-million-dollar apartment development for married students.

The project is one of the few in this area employing all union labor. Sommers said his crews were giving a full day's work for a full day's wage. Productivity is better than prewar, he added.

An area fronting on Viers Mill rd. will be reserved for a modern shopping center. The builders are negotiating with the Montgomery County Board of Education for a 10-acre school site in the middle of the area.

The Viers Mill rd. area is under rapid development by other builders. Twinbrook, a proposed community of 600 homes, is under way about 2 miles from Viers Mill Village and O. L. Murdock is developing a tract between Wheaton and Viers Mill Village.

Ivey predicted the first homes at Viers Mill Village would be occupied within 90 days.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Joe Stalin's Long Shadow

About a month ago, the National Industrial Conference Board conducted an economists' round table on the business outlook for 1948. Present were such professional predicters as Lionel D. Edie, of Lionel D. Edie & Co.; Robert R. Nathan, of Robert R. Nathan Associates; Rufus S. Tucker, of General Motors; Everett E. Hagan, Budget Bureau, and M. R. Gainsbrugh, of the Conference Board.

Livingston

By and large, the experts were optimistic for the immediate future. As Edie put it: "Business is strong today, and it is going to be strong enough the first half of next year. Beyond that, I am frankly up in the air." Such humility for a seer!

Toward the end of the session, Solomon Fabricant, of the National Bureau of Economic Research, introduced a new note. He suggested that the others were paying too much attention to domestic problems—to whether consumers might be priced out of the market, to whether businessmen would be able to raise money to finance purchases of plant and equipment.

The "World Situation"

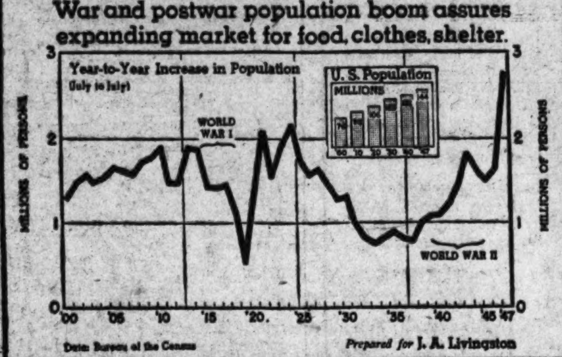
"I would like to raise this question," said Fabricant. "Are we in a current economic situation or a world situation? If certain political changes occur on the Continent, it is conceivable that the repercussions in this country may be such that any possible tendency toward a slump will be offset by political decisions and actions."

Recent headlines have reinforced Fabricant's point. The State Department last week released captured German documents showing that Stalin and Molotov were "active" bystanders in Hitler's rape of Poland. Apparently, Secretary Marshall has determined that in the cold war with Russia, words can travel two ways. We've decided to talk back.

On the same day, as if to justify that decision, press dispatches indicated that German Communists were fomenting strikes in Anglo-American occupied Bizonia. Just before that, the official Red army newspaper Taegliche Rundschau hinted that the British and American occupying forces were no longer wanted in Berlin, seat of the quadripartite council of occupying powers.

MORE MOUTHS TO FEED

War and postwar population boom assures expanding market for food, clothes, shelter.



Data: Bureau of the Census

Prepared for J. A. Livingston

All this has a direct, tangible bearing on business here, as a glance at the United States budget will show. For the fiscal year starting July 1, the President has listed estimated expenditures of 11 billions for national defense and another 7 billion dollars for "international affairs and finance." This last includes 4 billions for the European Recovery Plan and 1¼ billions for support of the Army in occupied areas. Thus 18 billions of a 40-billion-dollar budget—45 per cent—is directly related to what Fabricant calls the "world situation."

Defense Trend: Up

These expenditures for defense and foreign aid are about equal to the estimated business expenditures for new plant and equipment this year. Thus, anything that adds to or subtracts from them will accelerate or decelerate the pace of business. And conceivably they may make up for any decline in business expansion.

At the moment, the direction seems up, rather than down—notwithstanding the debates in Congress over the dollar amount of the Marshall Plan. The recent report of the President's Air Policy Commission, "Survival in the Air Age," suggests as much. For adequate air defense, the report said, we must double the Air Force budget. By the same token, if we are to build Europe up, we will have to see that supplies flow promptly and smoothly. Only in that way can we quell strikes and rioting which spring directly from poverty and desperation.

Baby Boom Ends

Meanwhile, here's a note for real estate agents, building contractors, crib manufacturers, layette salesmen, and diaper services. There's been a change in trend. In November, for the third successive month, the birth rate fell below the corresponding month of the year before. Apparently, the postwar boom in babies is over, apparently the "resurgence in the reproductivity of the American people"—as the Bureau of the Census puts it—is on the wane.

That doesn't mean that the economic forces released by the war-inspired marriages and births have spent themselves and are no longer affecting business. They are. The high demand for new homes, for furniture, and for baby clothes and equipment are directly traceable to the baby boom. Such purchases come under the head of consumer capital formation. And they seem likely to persist a while longer.

This marks a striking difference between this war and the last war. Though population continued to increase during the First World War, the rate of increase dropped—largely because immigration was cut off. This time immigration was a minor factor, to begin with. Not so love. Population jumped (see chart).

The sharp increase in mouths to feed and bodies to clothe and shelter may be the factor that has made this postwar period easier than the last one. Then we had a business break a year and a half after the armistice. Today, 2½ years after VJ-Day, the readjustment is still to come. Perhaps that's because the proportionate increase in physical demands for goods and services for human life is greater this time, relative to prewar, than last time.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Jan. 24 (AP).—After a day of irregular price trends, wheat closed mixed, corn easy and oats steady on the Board of Trade today.

The only grain which showed a consistent trend throughout the session was oats, which rose after the first few minutes of dealings and held onto its gains. Strength in the cash market, where No. 2 white oats were selling as much as 17 cents a bushel over the price of the May future, provided the basis for firmness in this grain.

Wheat was off a couple of cents early, influenced by snows in the Southwest and an Agriculture Department tabulation showing that stocks were large. During this early period, corn showed strength. But toward the close wheat displayed recovery powers while corn eased below yesterday's finish.

Wheat closed 1¼ lower to 1 cent higher, May 2.93¾@2.94. Corn was ⅜ to 1¼ lower, May 2.64¾@2.65½. Oats were ¼ to 1½ higher, May 1.27½@1.27⅝, and soybeans were unchanged to ½ lower, March 4.20.

Snows ranging up to as much as 8 inches were reported overnight in parts of Kansas, Nebraska and Oklahoma. This was considered beneficial from both the standpoint of moisture and protection against extreme cold. But new-crop wheat has been relatively weak for the past few days and news of snow brought out no aggressive selling. In late dealings, short-coverings helped the new-crop contracts.

The range follows:

New York Cotton

New York, Jan. 24 (AP).—Cotton futures closed firm today with prices 5 to 70 cents a bale higher.

Heavy trade buying came into the market in late dealings and eliminated a sluggish undertone which prevailed during most of the session.

Traders stated that there was a fair amount of low-grade cotton certificated in Texas which at one time was earmarked for export to Japan, but now may be tendered against March contracts where there is still a fairly large open interest remaining to be satisfied.

Stocks Waver Uncertainly in Dull Trading

New York, Jan. 24 (AP).—The stock market today emerged from its third straight losing week with assorted favorites crawling toward recovery while many leaders continued to give ground.

The week's general retreat was blamed mainly on persistent skepticism regarding taxes, hitches in the Marshall Plan, a possible new round of wage demands and disturbing foreign situations. Occasional comebacks were based on timid professional short covering and other buying inspired by hopes that the lengthy dip would bring a technical rebound.

WHAT STOCKS DID	Sat.	Fri.
Advances	216	274
Declines	226	400
Unchanged	218	264
Total issues	660	938

A severe cold wave and threats of a big snow storm found boardrooms virtually deserted during the short session. Gains and losses, mostly in fractions, were pretty evenly divided. Transfers for the two hours of 300,000 shares equaled those of last Saturday which were a bottom since November 15. The week's aggregate of 5,143,720 shares compared with 4,616,550 last week which were a minimum since mid-May.

Up a point on the day were Plymouth Oil at 47½ and Youngstown Sheet at 70½. Modest advances were retained by United States Steel, Chrysler United Aircraft, International Telephone (again the most active), Anaconda, Johns-Manville, Texas Gulf Producing, Texas Co., N. C. Central, Southern Pacific and Illinois Central.

Paramount Pictures touched a new 1947-48 low but finished unchanged at 19⅛. Allied Chemical yielded 2 at 181 and Union Pacific 1¼ at 153½. Lesser minus marks were shown for Goodyear, Montgomery Ward, Woolworth, Oliver Corp., International Harvester, American Telephone, Kennecott, duPont, Union Carbide, American Tobacco "B," Great Northern Railway, Sinclair Oil, Mission Corp., Transcontinental & Western Air and Loew's.

Bonds were narrow and commodities mixed.

The Associated Press 60-stock composite was unchanged for the day at 62.5, which equalled the low of December 5, which in turn was a low since June 10.

Fortunes have been made by those quick to see relationships in far-flung business events. That is the mark of the astute investor. And that is why Barron's National Business and Financial Weekly can prove so profitable for you.
Barron's gives you an integrated report of current business and financial activities. It puts you "on top" of the whole investment scene . . . enables you to anticipate trends and grasp profitable investment opportunities that lie ahead.

Assets Up 64% For Jefferson Federal S. & L.

By S. Oliver Goodman
Post Reporter

Jefferson Federal Savings & Loan Association showed a 64 per cent increase in assets during 1947, President Fred A. Smith reported to shareholders. Resources are in excess of $5,147,000, a gain of about two million dollars for the year.

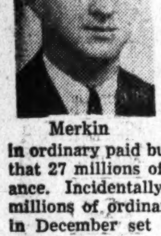
F. A. Smith

Smith added that the past year was the busiest in the institution's history with more than $2,300,000 loaned to new borrowing members and a net loan increase of $1,841,023. Reserves of more than $263,000 also showed a substantial gain.

At the annual meeting of shareholders, Albert G. Norton was elected to the board, succeeding his father, the late Howard R. Norton. Other directors were reelected as follows: Floyd E. Davis, Fred A. Smith, L. Perry West, C. Clinton James, Dr. Ernest M. Colvin, J. Hawley Smith, Richard A. Norris, Edward A. Dent, F. E. Davis, jr., Gen. David McCoach and Dr. David L. Maxwell.

Smith was reelected president and other officers were renamed as follows: C. C. James, vice president and general counsel; F. E. Davis, treasurer; James W. Clark, secretary, and J. H. Smith, assistant treasurer.

LEADING AGENT: Harry Merkin of Washington ranked as leading agent of the Equitable Life Assurance Society in December sales production. He qualified as a member of Equitable's Million-Dollar Club in 1947. Claude A. Cook, local manager of Equitable, reported yesterday that the Washington agency in 1947 had 11 millions in ordinary paid business and more that 27 millions of ordinary insurance. Incidentally, Equitable's 110 millions of ordinary paid business in December set a new monthly record for the society.



Merkin

WHO'S WHO TODAY: Albert W. Howard is the new president of Home Plate Glass Insurance Co., of Washington, succeeding the late George M. Emmerich. Howard also is head of Firemen's Insurance Co . . . Charles W. Trippe has been appointed sales manager of radio stations WINX and WINX-FM . . . New officers of the National Airport Club are David A. Robb, president; Robert Minogue, vice president; John Brock, secretary, and Eric Bramley, treasurer . . . Daniel D. Strohmeier has been elected vice president of Bethlehem Steel Co. in charge of the shipbuilding division.

ODD LOTS: The Washington Control of Controllers Institute of America will hear Carl P. Herbert and Robert E. Lee at a session Tuesday night in the Carlton Hotel. Herbert is president of Government Research Association and Lee is chief of the investigating staff of the House Appropriations Committee . . . Members of the District of Columbia Building and Loan League Tuesday will hear Hawley Smith discuss plans for the annual banquet . . . Anacostia Federal Savings and Loan Association had a record business year in 1947 with assets climbing to a new high of $2,780,000, Secretary Carl C. Smuck reported . . . Because Argentina Central Bank refused to approve payment, Swift International Co., Ltd., for the first time in 30 years failed to declare the regular quarterly dividend . . . United Corp. has asked SEC approval to distribute about half of its common stock holding in Niagara Hudson Power Corp., to United's shareholders VEPCO PLANS: Virginia Electric & Power Co., is preparing to sell 10 million dollars of new 30-year first and refunding bonds and $11,753,800 of 15-year convertible debentures. The debentures will be offered to holders of common stock through subscription rights which entitle them to purchase $100 of debentures for each 25 shares held. Approval of the plan will be sought at a special meeting of preferred stockholders March 5. The company announced an initial quarterly dividend of 30 cents on common, payable June 21 to stock of record June 1.

UTILITY REPORTS Potomac Electric Power Co. reports net income of $540,407 for December compared with $232,395 in December, 1946. Operating revenues last month totaled $2,539,177 against $2,098,788 in December, 1946. Net income for the year 1947 amounted to $3,277,628, compared with $3,464,562 for 1946. The latter item shows results without retroactive adjustments giving effect to judicial determination in May, 1947, of an order of the Public Utilities Commission dated July 22, 1944, and to other orders of the commission issued after such determination.

AUTO DEMAND: Although most auto makers have been reluctant to release specific figures as to the backlog of orders on hand, Buick has finally broken the ice. Indicative of the tremendous demand generally for new cars, Buick reports that dealers at the end of 1947 held unfilled orders for 526,000 cars, equal to 1.9 years production at the 1947 rate of output. Industry officials now predict that motorists may not be able to get fairly prompt delivery of new cars before 1951.

1947 Factory Auto Sales Total 4,796,399 Units

Detroit, Jan. 24 (AP).—The United States automotive industry last year sold at the factories 4,796,399 cars, trucks, trucks and coaches, according to the Automobile Manufacturers Association.

The total compares with 3,089,550 units sold in 1946 and was topped only by 1929 factory sales of 5,358,420 vehicles and the 1937 sales of 4,808,974 units.

Last year's exports, it was reported included 260,871 passenger cars or 7.3 per cent of the industry's car output, and 251,482 trucks and coaches, which represented 20.3 per cent of the commercial vehicle output.

Infection Cuts Yield of Cocoa

Accra, Gold Coast Colony, Jan. 24 (AP).—The seriousness of an infection attacking cocoa trees on the Gold Coast was outlined by Gov. Sir Gerald Creasy, who said it is probable that unless drastic measures are immediately taken, cocoa in the Gold Coast may be wiped out within the next 20 years.

From one or two square miles infected in 1932, the disease has spread over 360 square miles in 1945. The disease killed trees from 1932 to 1939 at an average of one million yearly and five million yearly from 1939 to 1945.

The financial loss to the country is already appalling; 1936 to 1937 production amounted to 300,000 tons. The 1946 to 1947 crop decreased to 192,000 thousand tons, representing a loss of 108,000 tons.

President Robert W. Wolcott said the company's highest peacetime production in history was accomplished despite a critical shortage in pig iron and scrap metal.

Net income was $2,835,701, Wolcott reported, or 5.4 per cent of sales.

Dividends on Common Stocks Rose 20% in '47, Survey Shows

New York, Jan. 24 (AP).—Cash dividend payments on common stocks comprising the New York Stock Exchange list rose nearly 20 per cent in 1947 to an estimated total of $3,254,653,000, the Stock Exchange monthly magazine reported today.

The report said 851 equity issues made disburements during the year, and of those 64.8 per cent showed increases over 1946, while dividends on 121 issues were reduced, deferred or eliminated and the remainder continued the 1946 rates.

Some of the large industrial groups, while showing only moderate percentage gains, swelled the total heavily. The automotive group, with a 40.9 per cent increase had a total of $233,506,000 in dividend payments; petroleum companies showed a gain of 28.9 per cent with $431,176,000 in payments; and 73 chemical companies paid stockholders 21.3 per cent more than in 1946 with a total of $376,316,000. Although 15 companies paid out less in dividends than in the preceding year.

The land, realty and hotel group showed by far the highest percentage increase in dividend payments with a gain of 339.2 per cent, although the total paid out was only $4,379,000.

Industries showing gains of more than 50 per cent in dividend payments included paper and publishing, up 59.9 per cent; mining, 58.1; textiles, 56.2, and ship operating, 54.7.

At the same time the 10 listed rubber companies "distributed sizable earnings," but showed an increase of only 11.2 per cent because "the comparison figured from so high a base" in 1946.

Greatest drop in disbursements to stockholders was a 63.9 per cent decline in air transport, followed by a decrease of 48 per cent in the aircraft manufacturing group.

Shipbuilding dividends were down 23.4 per cent and railroad payments were 6.6 per cent lower.

Of the railroad group the report said, "A 10 per cent freight rate increase brought considerable relief during the last few weeks of the period, and an interim rise of the same amount started the carriers into 1948 in a more relaxed situation so far as net income deriving from dense traffic goes."

7th Burglary At His Church Irks Pastor

The seventh burglary within a year of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, 9th and K sts. nw., was reported yesterday to police.

Police also disclosed they were investigating the ransacking this week of the Washington home of Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R., Mass.), at 2222 Wyoming ave. nw. Although the home was left in disorder, the only missing articles were a safety razor, a shaving mirror, a comforter and a brief case.

The church burglary occurred sometime after it closed Friday evening. Police said the thieves must have hidden in the church earlier since the place had been securely locked.

Dr. Rustin Exasperated

Declaring that he was "exasperated," Dr. John W. Rustin, pastor of the church, said of the police investigation into the burglaries:

"They come, bow and scrape and don't do anything. They seem to be inefficient—don't know what to do. Every other city I have lived in has a mayor or city council you can go to. Here you don't know where to go or what do to remedy the situation."

He said that little more than a month ago, after a robbery at the church, he telephoned Major Robert J. Barrett, Superintendent of police.

"He was very nice. He sent a special detective and he was very nice, too. In fact all of them are so nice that you hate to fuss at them. But they never get anything done."

Police and church officials differed over the value of the loot. Police gave it as $150. Mrs. Marie Bockstahler, financial secretary of the church, said it was worth $300. Articles taken included two typewriters, a radio, a vacuum cleaner and an electric clock.

Discovered by Maid

The burglary at Senator Saltonstall's residence was discovered, police said, by a maid, Jean Large, on Thursday, after the house had been vacant for several days.

A camera and muskrat coat valued at $540 was stolen from an automobile parked at 15th and L sts. nw., its owner, Albert Sucula, Cleveland, Ohio, reported. He resides temporarily at the Sheraton Hotel.

Eugene Shapiro, 5225 2d st. nw., reported $150 was stolen from his liquor store at 3500 Connecticut ave. nw.

Ray D. Thomas, 1344 Newton st. nw., reported a thief lifted $300 from his trousers, draped over a chair in his second-floor room. Arrested and held for investigation were a 29-year-old woman and a 35-year-old man.

'Old 97' Ballad Author Dies In Williamsburg

Williamsburg, Va., Jan. 24 (AP).—The man who wrote "The Wreck of the Old Ninety-Seven"—David Graves George—died here yesterday.

George, whose home was in Beaverdam, Va., was 82. He gained national recognition in 1928 when he brought suit against the Victor Talking Machine Co.—now R. C. A. Victor—for recognition of his rights as author of the railroad ballad, which Victor recorded in 1924. Ten years later—in 1938—George was awarded $65,295 in Royalties.

George claimed he wrote the song in a pumphouse at Franklin Junction, Va., in 1903, shortly after "The Old Ninety-Seven"—a Southern Railway fast mail train—was wrecked near Danville.

Funeral will be held in Richmond tomorrow at 4 p. m., with interment in Forest Lawn Cemetery.

A 17-year-old girl, Ellen Sona, described as a cafe dancer, who was arrested with the four men, was being held for juvenile court.

Gibson Island, Md., Jan. 24 (AP). Three western Maryland residents escaped without a scratch today when they made a forced landing in a snow storm on the Gibson Island Golf Course.

Kenneth Jewell, 25-year-old Cumberland pilot, brought the craft down on a fairway "on the third try," describing the landing as a "birdie" because the fairway "led to the first green, a par four hole."

Jewell, F. Y. Borden, 43, the plane owner, of Cumberland, and Thomas Harper, 34, of Hagerstown were en route from Allentown, Pa., to Hagerstown when they were caught in the wintry gale.

His first two shots struck Mrs. Mary Rifici, 29, of Cleveland, and flagman Ira M. Crider, 53, of Freedom, Pa. A third shot jammed the gun, a .25 caliber automatic.

WANTED A GOVERNMENT GIRL FOR MARY WORTH

$200 to winner
$50 to runner-up
10 prizes of $5 each
NATIONAL FAME AS A MODEL!

$200 . . . plus
9-day trip to BERMUDA to the winner
of this contest

HERE'S good news for all government girls—and wonderful news for one girl in particular.

The famous Mary Worth—the comic strip lady who holds together the episodes of the various glamour girls in The Washington Post's Mary Worth comic—is coming to Washington (not in real life, of course, but in the comic strip).

She will meet a government girl. And just as she got mixed into Elissa Lake's romance with Harvey Saxton by getting a job in a department store, so Mary Worth will become involved in the daily lives of government girls in Washington. All over the country newspaper readers will be following this comic strip story of Washington's girls (with The Washington Post's own Jerry Kluttz serving as technical advisor for accuracy!) America will get new insight, a fresh, sympathetic understanding, of the problems of the girls who help keep our government running.

One government girl, in particular, will be the focus of all eyes. Ken Ernst, the artist who draws the strip, will use an actual government girl as the model for his pen-and-ink heroine. And The Washington Post is going to help make the selection by holding a contest. It starts right now. First prize is $200; given by The Washington Post, plus a 9-day, expenses-paid trip to Bermuda by the World-Wide Travel Service Corp., Colonial Airlines and Hotel Bermudiana. Eleven runners-up also get cash prices.

Here are the rules. Read them now and make up your mind to enter. Someone will win. Someone will get the $200 and the fun and excitment of being in the spotlight. It might as well be you!

The Washington Post

Here are the RULES!

1 The Mary Worth government girl contest is designed to select a model government girl upon whom the artist of the Mary Worth strip will base the drawing of the heroine of his government girl episode.
2 All girls employed by the United States government in the metropolitan Washington area are eligible to compete.
3 Entries shall consist of photographs only, one photograph from each entrant, the photograph to be not more than one year old at the time of entry.
4 Any kind of black and white picture (no color shots or tints) may be entered, including snapshots, but be sure to get one that does you justice and is big enough for the judges to see what you look like.
5 Pictures must be entered unmounted. No frame, no glass.
6 The Washington Post will make all reasonable effort to return photographs but accepts no responsibility for their return.
7 Each photograph must be accompanied by a slip of paper PASTED to the bottom of the photograph, carrying the following information, typed or printed: Name, local address, age, home address, type of work, government office in which employed, plus signature. (For convenience, The Washington Post will publish a form every day which can be used as an entry blank.)
8 Winner will be used as a model for the comic strip, will receive $200 in cash and a trip to Bermuda. Runner-up gets $50 in cash, next ten get $5 each.
9 Decision of the judges will be final. There will be no correspondence of any kind in regard to individual entries.
10 Contest runs from January 7 through January 28. Entries postmarked later than January 28 will not be considered.
11 By entering the contest, the entrant binds herself to accept these rules and conditions as here stated.

Through going over the rules? Then what are you waiting for? Don't be modest—remember, this isn't a beauty contest, but a search for a model for Mary Worth's Government Girl. Look over Ken Ernst's previous heroines—Elissa, Brick, Crystal, Pixie. All different, weren't they? Maybe you are the type that Ken Ernst is looking for next! What do you have to lose? And $200 to win! Get out your photos now, look them over, make your selections, fill out the entry blank, and MAIL IT IN. Be sure to protect the photo with cardboard and mark the envelope "PHOTO—DO NOT BEND." Address Contest Department, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C.

USE THIS CONVENIENT

Alice Coffin To Show Art For Hospital

By Marie McNair

THE Children's Hospital—and there's no worthier institution—will add to its building fund a nice sum this month if Mrs. Philip O. Coffin's art exhibit is the success that it deserves to be.

Opening on February 3 at the United Nations Club, Mrs. Coffin will put up a group of 22 of her oil paintings to be on view for a week. On the first day the artist will be there to open the show at 2 o'clock, and has asked a number of members of the Ladies Board of Children's Hospital to assist. Among them is Mrs. Russell Train, whose husband, Admiral Train, chairman of the advance gifts division of the hospital, gave his own one-man art show last year, the proceeds going to the building fund. Mrs. Frederick Brooke will be on hand that day and Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, Mrs. Leland Harrison, Mme. van Swinderen, Mrs. R. Gilpin Irvin, Mrs. Randall Hagner and Mrs. Coffin's daughter, Mrs. John F. Sweeney.

The daughter of the late George von L. Meyer, who was in turn Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of the Navy and United States Ambassador to Italy, Alice Coffin first started to paint when she lived with her family in Rome. For years she did nothing more about developing a very definite talent which is hers. Recently she took it up again, studied at the Corcoran School of Art, the Phillips Gallery and at American University and now she feels she's ready for her first one-man show.

The group of oils—New England landscapes and interiors—were all done last summer at the family summer home at Hamilton on the Massachusetts North Shore. "The Old Congregational Church" at Ipswich and "Flood Tide" at the same pictorial village will be shown along with the "Old Meeting House" at Hamilton, and "Ship Building" at Essex. Among the interiors which she does so well are "The Loewstoft Corner," "The Blue Den" and "The Red Chair," the latter two being on loan for the exhibition.

One Washington owner of Mrs. Coffin's work is Mrs. Richard Southgate, who summers on the North Shore and knows the charm of the countryside, and Lady Lindsay, wife of the former British Ambassador, cherishes another.

Mrs. Lodge Adds Writing To Her Busy Day

MRS. JOHN DAVIS LODGE'S theory is that having only one life she's going to crowd as much as she can into it. Between keeping house, looking after her children, teaching dancing and going to parties, the wife of the Representative from Connecticut has now taken up writing.

With an assignment from Look Magazine, Francesca Lodge went to Europe last summer, interviewed half a dozen leading figures in the world today, studied the situations in which they find themselves enmeshed.

In Italy she met her husband, traveling as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House; the Congressional Educational Committee and the National Security Subcommittee. Mrs. Lodge, who doesn't like planes, did her traveling by train, skipped some of the countries visited by her husband. But she brought back enough first-hand information with pictures to make a magazine series soon to appear in print.

Blonde Francesca Lodge has been dancing all her life. Meeting schedules, making one-night appearances, catching trains, is nothing, Mrs. Lodge has discovered, compared to sitting down and writing a page of copy. The telephone rings, her thoughts vanish into air; the laundryman calls, again, words and phrases are forgotten; "mother, I'm hungry," echoes down the hall, and as Mrs. Lodges flies into the kitchen, her ideas fly out the window. And so it goes. "It's a nightmare," is the only way Mrs. Lodge can describe it.

Joseph Davieses Return From Cruise on Sea Cloud

FORMER AMBASSADOR and MRS. JOSEPH DAVIES have returned from a cruise to Nassau on board their yacht, Sea Cloud, and are in their villa at Palm Beach for the remainder of the season.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, lovely wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force, will sing in Washington for the first time at the February meeting of the National Society of Arts and Letters to be held at the home of Mrs. Emil Hurja.

Friends of Mrs. Thomas R. Cowell, who left Washington several years ago to live in New York, will be glad to know that she's going to move back here in the fall.

Harris & Ewing Photos

MRS. HARRY TRUMAN and her daughter, Miss Margaret Truman, are pictured arriving at the Navy ball at the Mayflower Hotel last Thursday, and being greeted by their host, Secretary of the Navy John L. Sullivan. The ball, given by the Navy Relief Society, was a revival of a peacetime social tradition which had been suspended since the spring of '41. Miss Truman spent most of the evening with her young friends at Mrs. George Mesta's box, while her mother took her place beside Mr. Sullivan in the honor box

CHIC Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador (seated), is introduced to Robert Taylor of the screen, who served as master of ceremonies for the ball. Mrs. John Nicholas Brown, wife of the Assistant Secretary of Navy for Air, and Gen. Omar Bradley, new Chief of Staff, share in getting the two acquainted. Mrs. Brown, head of the executive committe in charge of the ball, commended the film star—who also served as a lieutenant in the Naval Reserve—for "undertaking such a hazardous task" as presiding at the affair

Mrs. Holland Is Longing For Florida

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

IT'S NICE to know about the Capital's prominent transients, especially when they are attractive, friendly and married to one of our newer Senators. Take Mary Holland, for instance, the wife of Spessard L. Holland, Florida's junior Senator. She's slim, well groomed, the proud mama of four, three of them married.

MRS. THAYER

Mary will tell you she has never been anywhere, never done anything, is terribly homesick for Florida. She will also say that she hates to be alone, loves to meet people, is terribly homesick for Florida.

Sure, she's homesick for Florida! She was brought up in Lakeland, daughter of a country doctor who never passed a stranger without a greeting and without asking whether he or she had come for a visit or intended to locate. And, like her father, Mary is a one-woman chamber of commerce. She can tell you about Florida citrus fruit, cattle, inland waterways, seashells, fishing, how to cook Florida's game, how to serve grits—her husband eats them every night of his life! What she won't tell you is how she does "nothing." When her husband was in Florida politics — prosecuting attorney, county judge, State senator, Governor (the best, it's said, Florida ever had)—Mrs. Holland sat through all legislative sessions, wrote a weekly report for her husband. Here in Washington she's up to her old tricks, attends every committee meeting, will soon know her subject inside and out.

Mrs. Holland's almost as famous for her memory

MRS. JOHN L. SULLIVAN draws from the traditional old wooden bucket for the ticket number whose holder won a case of champagne, one of the door prizes for the Navy ball. Mr. Taylor, Lieut. John Parr of Detroit, Mich. (left), and Lieut. (j. g.) J. P. Mulligan of Denver, Colo. (right), assist in the ceremonies. One of the highlights in the entertainment that followed were song numbers by Mrs. Clarence Mackay, the former Anna Case of opera fame. She sang "Mignon" and "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia" against the nautical setting of swords, bayonets and life preservers that decorated the ballroom

The Service Set

Prize Boxers Entered In Fort Myer Dog Show

By Norma Foust

CAPITAL SERVICE SOCIETY will focus a good part of its attention this week on dogs, the Boxer breed.

The big occasion will be the Potomac Boxer Club's second annual show Friday in the post gymnasium at Fort Myer, Va., for the benefit of JANGO, Junior Army Navy Guild Organization, Inc.

Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower will be there to award the "Best-in-the-Show" trophy. She and her husband, the retiring chief of staff, are among the affair's prominent sponsors, as are Assistant Secretary of the Air Force and Mrs. Eugene Zuckert. Mrs. Zuckert will award prizes to the best children handlers of the day.

Secretary of Defense and Mrs. James Forrestal head the list of sponsors which also includes Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Clinton P. Anderson, Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. W. Averell Harriman, and many, many other Army and Navy notables too numerous to mention.

The show, scheduled to last from 1 until 9 p. m., has drawn boxers from all across the country and from Switzerland, Italy and Germany as well, with 161 dogs having been entered so far.

Included in the program are two puppy classes one for pups from 6 to 9 months and the other for 9 to 12 month olds. Dogs from this country will compete for the "Best-of-the-Breed" trophy.

Then there'll be an obedience training exhibition under the direction of Lieut. Douglas La Pierre, USA, and the brace and team classes.

For those whose devotion to things canine might keep them away from dinner, hot supper will be served buffet-style from 3 to 8 p. m.

Tickets are available at JANGO headquarters, 1704 K st. nw., and at room 5-459 in the Pentagon Building. The Arnold Bus Line goes within half a block from the post gymnasium.

IN-CASE-YOU-DIDN'T-KNOW DEPARTMENT: The Boxer breed is comparatively new in this country. It was introduced here from Europe less than 30 years ago, and its popularity has grown by leaps and bounds, especially since it was a Boxer that won the "Best-in-the-Show" trophy last year in the Madison Square Garden dog show.

Boxers originated in southern Germany where they were used to hunt wild boar. Instead of scenting and pointing, they would attack the game and hold it down by its ears until their masters could get within range.

CHILDREN of Army Air Forces officers in this area hold the spotlight on the party date book. They will be feted at the Air Force Assembly to be held Friday night in the ballroom of Bolling Field Officers Club. Sponsor of the affair is the Air Forces Officers Wives' Club under the chairmanship of Mrs. Earle E. Partridge, wife of Major General Partridge.

Col. and Mrs. Samuel W. Van Meter will serve as host and hostess

MME. JACQUELINE PATRENOTRE, a visitor from Paris, was honored at a dinner party given by Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss last evening at her home. Mme. Patrenotre is mayor of Rambauillliet, Paris suburb, and a councilor on the Council of the Republic.

Receiving considerable attention at the cocktail party given last Wednesday by the Danish Counselor and Mme. Bertelsen at their home in Chevy Chase was Flemming Juncker, a visitor from Denmark. Formerly connected with OSS and SOE in London and an underground worker of fame, Mr. Juncker is here on a three-month tour of the country to study agricultural forestry.

Yellow pea soup and special smorgasbord relished by the Swedish have been discontinued at the Parrot Restaurant during the illness and absence of the Swedish manager, Erick Vinquist. The early return of both manager and the menu is earnestly hoped for by the Swedish colony and their friends.

The Russian Embassy closed down on January 22 for one day, the anniversary of Lenin's death.

Back from their Friendship Train tour of Italy, Mr. and Mrs. Drew Pearson were honored at a small luncheon at the Italian Embassy Thursday afternoon by the Ambassador and Signora Tarchiani. Among the guests were former Ambassador of Italy, Augusto Rosso, and Mme. Rosso; C. Brescani-Turroni, Italian delegate to the International Fund, and the Italian Minister and Countess di Stefano.

Among other small gatherings were the cocktail parties given by the Military Attache of the Belgian Embassy, Maj. Count Yvan du Monceau de Bergendal and the Commercial Counselor of the Swiss Legation and Mme. Fuchss.

At Count du Monceau's party were Miss Nora Martins, Capt. and Mrs. Floyd Ferris, Baron Jean Snoy, Miss Rosalind Rust, Col. Godfrey McHugh and George Baker.

The Minister of New Zealand and Lady Berendsen left early in the week for the West Coast, whence they flew to New Zealand for a visit.

Skiing in Canada at St. Sauveur are the Danish Ambassador, Henrik de Kauffmann, and his daughter, Miss Tilda de Kauffmann.

OLD sea stories flourished at the festive dinner and ball. Here Fleet Admiral William D. Leahy winds up what must have been a whopper and Mme. Henrik de Kauffmann, whose husband is the Danish Ambassador, seems appropriately impressed. The admiral was one of the many top-rankers who were introduced by Mr. Taylor during the evening

THE Marine Corps' new commandant, Gen. Clifton B. Cates, and Mrs. H. K. Hewitt, wife of Admiral Hewitt, have an after-dinner chat. Both agree that the Navy ball wouldn't be the success it was without the Corps. Earlier in the evening it was the Marine Corps' marching band that amazed the guests with its precision drills

Miss Fleming Is Engaged to Mr. Gutchess

Maj. Gen. Philip Fleming, Administrator, Federal Works Agency, and Mrs. Fleming of Washington and Sandwich, N. H., announce the engagement of their daughter, Jocelyn Fleming, to Franklin Gutchess, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Gutchess of Philadelphia, Pa.

Miss Fleming was presented to society in St. Paul, Minn., in 1939. She was graduated from Concord Academy, Concord, Mass., and from Byrn Mawr College, class of 1942, with honors. She was president of her class at both schools. During the war the bride-elect held an executive position with the Foreign Economic Administration. This winter she is in Boston in preparation for postgraduate study in Government and economics.

Mr. Gutchess was graduated from Swarthmore College in the 1936 class with high honors. He has been associated with the Security and Exchange Commission and the OPA and is currently doing postgraduate work in economics at Harvard University.

Miss Fleming's father was formerly administrator of the wage and hour division. Mrs. Fleming is the former Miss Dorothy Carson of Burlington, Iowa. The bride-elect's brother, Carson Fleming, served as a pilot with the Eighth Air Force and was a prisoner of war of the Germans for 30 months.

Mrs. Holland Longs for Florida Sands

as the Senator who, reliable friends insist, can say "hello" to 30,000 Floridians, actually know who they are. There is a true story of how a man tried to test Holland; said they'd been to school together 20 years before. Holland was sure he'd never seen him. "We've never met—but I know who you are. You must be Sam Jones' kid brother!" "And he was! As a joint result—and Mary Holland's very definitely part of the team—through sheer warmth, friendliness, the desire to do a job well, they have built up a record to be proud of. They have no political enemies, a surprising fact since part of the Holland legend is complete tolerance, which is difficult to achieve in the "deep S'uth." His most bitter political battle was setting up Negro schools, his most exciting deed was saving three condemned Negroes from lynching by spiriting them to jail in an adjoining county. And, quietly, Mary Holland has been back of him every inch of the way.

Thrifty Housekeepers Can Learn From Early American Cooks

Here's a savory cue from early American cooks that will turn cheaper cuts of meat into tender, flavorsome treats. Use one of the economy cuts of veal from the forequarter, free from skin and fat. Have the butcher remove the bone and roll the meat. Rub with salt, pepper and flour. Melt 4 tablespoons of fat in a heavy skillet and brown on all sides; place on a rack in a heavy pot. Fry 1 large onion, sliced, in fat until golden brown in color; add 4 sprigs of chopped parsley and pour over meat. Sprinkle with nutmeg. Add a 12-ounce container of beer or tomato juice and about a cup of water, adding more water as needed. As always when using beer in cooking, open container about 15 minutes before using. Cover heavy pot tightly and allow to simmer until meat is tender, between 2 and 3 hours for a 4-pound roast. Cut carrots lengthwise and in quarters. Slice white or sweet potatoes in halves. Add vegetables about 20 minutes before serving time. When done, thicken gravy with flour.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Brilliant Salaried Executive Dreads Asking Salary Raises and His Wife, Fighting Living Costs, Finds His Timidity Crazing This Year

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband is a fine sensitive man of unusual intelligence and I love him dearly, but I am beginning to feel he is actually stupid in one respect.

In his business career—he is a salaried executive—he has always found it difficult to ask for an increase in salary. He has to feel driven to the wall to act. Each time a raise is due him, he permits almost a full year to elapse "waiting for the propitious moment." But having asked, he always gets.

His salary has tripled over the years, and in normal times his present income would be sufficient to meet our current needs, but measured against today's living costs it is about the equivalent of what he earned eight years ago: for one third the work and responsibilty.

Two years ago he changed positions, to undertake (at substantial salary increase) a terribly difficult job with a disorganized management, where he has accomplished a great deal due to brilliant planning and slavish industry. But aside from a nice bonus this year, his salary is still the same.

Man Supports His And Wife's Mothers

ON THE BASIS of his record, he certainly deserves an increase; and I feel that his failure to ask for it is construed by management as indication that he thinks he doesn't deserve one. I can't see how they can respect him for doing so much for so little; but his argument to me is, "This is not the proper time."

As he is an executive, we live accordingly. Not pretentiously, far from it; but we do live up to his position, though in appearance only, as we are both practical and economical; and he has as dependents our own large family, a separate establishment for his mother, and mine is partially dependent on him.

There are days when I have only a few cents in my pocket, we are so hard pressed; and we've drawn out all our savings in the last few years. I'm frightened; and when I think of how a salary increase a year ago would have eased our plight, it makes me almost crazy—and I am quite sure he is most unhappy.

I badly need an operation which we can't afford, as it would entail three months free of housework afterwards to ensure success and I haven't kept a maid in five years, due to inflated wages. Also we have children almost ready for college and no money to put them through. I am desperate with worry and if you can give us helpful advice I shall bless you to the end of my days. P. D.

Miracle That Man Hasn't Gone Crazy

DEAR P. D.: The miracle is that your husband hasn't gone crazy long since. Here we see him, a sensitive, conscientious man, flogging mind and body to accomplish terribly difficult tasks in the business world, in total personality struggle with exploitative and competitive forces—and doing this that he may supply the material demands of three grown women plus his own children, as if all were so many papooses on his back, while receiving as his only spur from you a screaming insatiable cry of "more, more, more."

It is you who are stupid. Alas, you don't—as the saying goes—"know from nothin'" about the man's mainsprings of personality: his worth, his potentials, what makes him tick, how to nourish his abilities to fulness of power so that commensurate prosperity would grow automatically.

You are totally ignorant, you have neither realistic nor sympathetic cognition, of the fierce strains implicit in the jobs he does and the tight ropes he must walk in dealing with the lords of Mammon. And of course you are blind as a bat to the strangler-effects on his vigor and initiative of a duty-bound relation to one of your type: a crass materialist, self-righteous parasite and eternal nagger.

Give Up Showy Social Striving

NOW, about inflation: Everybody dependent on earned income is in the same fix, riding the same hurricane, that you are today; and only fools are trying to keep up a front if it eats into savings or jeopardizes credit. So let big-shot appearances go by the board. Peace of mind is far more important and would enormously enhance your husband's bargaining power with employers.

As for the operation, if it is urgently necessary and not just a "poor me" racket, have the children pinchhit as domestic helpers in the convalescent period. If they are near college age and worth their salt, they should rise thus responsibly to family emergency—and be equally helpful in furthering their higher education if you can't pay the whole costs. In any event, stop bedeviling dad, who is an unsung hero, in my opinion. M. H.

Color in Your Life

Decorating Tip: Mix Hues With Your Taste

By Dorothy Draper

Book after book has been written on choosing a color scheme, making it seem as difficult a feat as a trip to Mars in a rocket ship. It isn't! Color schemes can grow out of anything you please. It may be the predominating color in your favorite painting, a special shade of pink from inside a sea shell, or yellow tulips growing against a gray stone wall. The world is full of inspiration for color schemes.

My theory is to select the loveliest colors you can find—throw them together—and your own taste, resourcefulness and individuality will carry you through.

Never be afraid of clear, fresh color! See it in terms of a magic palette that can turn a dreary room into one of enchantment. Then watch how that new brightness will affect you. One can't be drab and spiritless in a room that is alive and vibrant with color, be it light or dark. And if you're a doubting Thomas, you're just the one who should start right now to try it and see!

Selecting curtains and slipcovers in relation to wall colors seems to give most women the greatest difficulty. You can take your choice of two ways of handling this:

1. You can have an exactly matching color scheme. This is one that uses the same color throughout the room. For instance, I have a friend who has her walls and ceiling pale hydrangea-blue. The carpet is blue. The curtains are plain blue and the rug is blue with heavy fringe. All the slipcovers are in the same shade of blue. Flowers and accessories provide the necessary notes of interest.

2. Or you can have a sharply contrasting color scheme which is one that combines colors that help to set each other off. I know of a house in Maryland that had one room done in a deep elephant-gray, with ceilings in the same deep gray. The rug was rough, shaggy white cotton and the curtains a bright lemon yellow. The slipcovers were an elephant-gray chintz with big red and yellow flowers and green leaves. For an added touch of red there was a Chinese-red lacquer secretary. The scheme was most effective and with big white lamps and shades the result was both cheerful and inviting.

There aren't many "don'ts" about choosing a color scheme. Just have masses of color that balance. In other words, if you have a large yellow sofa on one side of the room, you will want to pick up the yellow on the other side of the room in curtains or chairs or both. It's as simple as that!

So don't worry too much about your color scheme, but let's go out of the same old dreary rut, and make ours a background for happy and optimistic living. We all can stand more color in our lives!

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white satin robe-de-style gown and veil fastened with stephanotis blossoms. Her flowers were a bouquet of stephanotis and lilies of the valley.

Miss Elys Lott, maid of honor, was gowned in ice blue satin. She wore a rose taffeta hat and carried an ald-fashioned bouquet of roses. The other attendants, Miss Yvonne Ache, Miss Regina Breves, Miss June de Mello and Miss Jaci Duffles, cousin of the bride, were dressed like the maid of honor.

Francis F. S. Harrell served as best man, and the ushers were Edward Everett Young, Jaime da Silva, Thomas Enzor and James Felton Head.

In accordance with Brazilian custom, the bridal couple were attended by their godparents, Brigadier and Senhora Ivan Carpenter Ferreira, Mrs. Francis F. S. Harrell and Capt. Hernan Justiano.

Mrs. Monies attended schools in Brazil and in Europe. Mr. Monies attended George Washington University. He is the grandson of the late Col. and Mrs. William Nelson Monies.

After a motor trip through the South, the couple will make their home at 1661 Preston rd., Alexandria.

Your Questions on Homemaking

I am on a diet and would like to know the caloric values of the small round crackers, wheat toast crackers about 1½ inches square, and the usual cut and brand of cold sliced luncheon meat. P. P.

Small round crackers have 20 calories per cracker. There are 15 calories in each wheat toast cracker. Sliced luncheon meat does vary in size and composition, but a slice of bologna 3 inches in diameter and cut ⅛ inch thick has approximately 40 calories.

I have a green woven burlap rug on which I have spilled some paraffin oil, which has left two large spots. Cleaning fluid does not seem to help. Can you tell me how to remove the spots? E. T.

The cleaning fluid should dissolve the paraffin oil. Probably the reason the spot remains after using it is because the rug is so thick that it is difficult to get all of the oil out. Perhaps if you make a paste of cleaning fluid and cornstarch or corn meal, work it well into the stain and allow to stand for several hours, it will draw the oil out. If the spot isn't removed with the first application, repeat. Several applications may be necessary.

Can you tell me what is wrong with my method of washing bath towels? I wash them in a washing machine, using warm water and one of the well-known brands of soap powder. I rinse two or three times in water as near the same temperature as the wash water as possible. All my other clothes are washed in the same manner, but the towels always come out harsh and stiff. I have some new, soft ones, and I would like very much to keep them so. I would appreciate knowing how this is to be done. B. K.

There are several things you can do to keep your bath towels soft. Be very sure that all of the soap is rinsed from them after washing. When wringing them, set the wringer so that as much water as possible is removed from them. Before hanging the towels to dry, give each several vigorous shakes. This will remove excess moisture and do much to fluff them. The shaking while they are wet will do much more to soften and fluff them than any other one thing. Drying in a brisk breeze when possible is also a good way to soften them.

How can I keep my rolls from having a hard crust when the inside is always soft? V. M. C.

To prevent hard crusts from forming on rolls, cover the rolls with a dampened cloth as they rise. Brushing the crusts with melted butter or margarine as soon as the rolls are removed from the oven will also soften the crusts. Then, too, rolls which have too much flour in them will develop a hard crust. Select a well-tested recipe for rolls, be sure that all measurements are level (sift the flour before measuring) and be careful not to work too much additional flour into the dough as you knead it and shape the rolls. The amount of flour needed to prevent dough from sticking to the board while kneading can be cut down by placing a heavy canvas or towel over the board. Tuck the ends of the towel under the edges of the board to keep it tight. Rub a little flour into the canvas before putting the dough onto it, and very little more will be needed. The canvas can be rolled and placed into a fruit jar, set into the refrigerator between bakings, to keep it sweet and clean. If you use a recipe which calls for exact amounts of all ingredients, and measure ingredients correctly, the dough should not be sticky after it has risen once and so very little flour will be needed on the hands to shape the rolls.

VEGETABLES add real glamor to the meal when they come to the table as a potpourri in a ring of rice. Three cups of cooked green beans, two onions, and three cups of cooked rice were used in the ring pictured above. Here's how they were combined, just before serving:

The thinly silced onions were browned in 4 tablespoons of margarine. Then onion slices were removed and a tablespoon of flour was browned in the same fat. Salt was added and 1 cup of liquor from the vegetables. Last, the onions and the heated beans were returned to the skillet. Hot rice was pressed into a metal mold, then turned out on a large chop dish. The bean mixture was poured into the center, with a few beans around the outside as a garnish. Almost any kind of canned, frozen, fresh-cooked or left-over vegetables can be used in making a delicious ring like this.

I bought a set of inexpensive cotton jersey-type slipcovers for my davenport and chair. They have a dark green stripe, a lighter green stripe, and then a leaf design in a white stitch that makes it stand out. Since buying a new rug, these slipcovers look horrible, and I'm wondering if they can be tinted blue. I say tinted, since I don't want to go to the trouble of dyeing them. Some one has told me it can't be done; that it would not turn out right, and I would ruin them. What do you think? Can they be tinted? If your answer is "no," would it likewise be "no" to dyeing them? Thank you. J. M. G.

By tinting, I presume you mean you wish to dip the covers in a dye solution, not boil them. Since your material has a dark stripe, I'm afraid tinting would not do the job you wish done. Even dyeing—that is, boiling the covers in a dye solution—would not remove the stripes unless you chose a color as dark or darker than the darkest stripe. If you wish a lighter shade or tint than that, why not use a dye stripping or color removing compound to remove all of the color from the slip covers before dyeing them? Then you can dye them any color you wish. But even then, I would suggest you boil the dye into the fabric, otherwise it will have to be renewed every time the covers are washed. Also, the dye, if it is not made fast by boiling, might be transferred to the upholstery under the slip cover. This type of material will probably shrink some from boiling, so stretch it both ways when wet to return to original size.

E. R. C.'s letter requesting uses for sour eggnog mix called this forth: I found by experience that equal portions of the sour mix can be substituted for sour cream in waffle batter or cut half and half with sweet milk and substituted for sour milk for waffles or pancakes. The results were unusually delicious. K. G. E.

Many thanks to K. G. E. for this suggestion. Incidentally, here's a note of warning: Be very sure eggnog hasn't acquired any peculiar flavors in souring in the refrigerator before using it.

Would you please give a recipe for Heavenly Hash Salad? None of the cook books give one. J. S.

Heavenly Hash Salad is usually a combination of fruits, marshmallows and whipped cream. There are different combinations of fruits which can be used. Here is one:

1 cup cherries, white, pitted
1 cup diced pineapple
1 cup orange sections
1 cup quartered marshmallows
¼ cup almonds, blanched and chopped
1 cup whipping cream
For the dressing, use:
2 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons flour
¼ teaspoon salt
Juice of 1 lemon
½ cup pineapple juice
2 eggs.

Mix sugar, flour, salt, add lemon and pineapple juice and cook until thick. Add beaten eggs and remove from heat. Allow to cool and add whipped cream. Fold dressing into fruits, nuts, and marshmallows which have been combined in a bowl. Chill and serve on lettuce. This combination is also delicious served on angel food cake as a dessert.

Homemade Slip Covers

If you are going to make a slip cover to hide the shabby chair, by all means shrink the material before making it up. Then there can be no shrinkage when it is laundered and you can make a perfect fitting of the chair without worry as to allowance. It will fit until worn out.

Date the Jellies

It is wise to write on the label of the jellies, preserves, pickles, etc., the year in which the article was done up. In this way the older preserves can be used first and nothing spoiled and wasted because it is kept too long.

Do You Glow or Glitter?

THE AVERAGE man does not like his girl to go to extremes to be conspicuous. In short, men prefer girls who glow to those who glitter.

That's what Dr. Henry A. Bowman and Priscilla Scott, who are in charge of courses in family life and grooming at Stephens College, state in an article in the January American Magazine.

"The girl who is most likely to be successful in courtship is the girl who is sincere and feminine," the educators say. "Men, for all their talk, are rank conservatives about women's grooming, especially that of their sweethearts or wives, and will usually be embarrassed if their feminine partner shows up in a spectacular outfit. They also are apt to detest any outfits on the woman that are sharply tailored or otherwise unfeminine."

Tricks for Teens

By Nancy Pepper

Don't think that your old favorites, saddle shoes, went out when the "new look" came in. Of course, you don't wear them with your long, flowing Gibson girl skirts—but there comes a time in the life of every teen when that old baggy sweater and those old comfortable saddles look too inviting to resist. Now, to prove that you're still up to your old tricks, here's what's been happening to saddle shoes whenever they're taken out of their temporary retirement.

PEDAL POINTERS—Just in case you forget your date schedule for the week—and, in case all the other jills don't know about it you list your dates in nail polish on the saddle sections of your saddle shoes. Comes Sunday and a little polish remover, and then you're ready to start all over again.

SADDLE SCORES—A popular decoration for your saddles is a listing of all this season's football scores—done in nail polish or white ink. Here's hoping they don't give you a case of fallen arches.

AUTOGRAPHOBIA—The latest spot for your friends' autographs is on the saddle section of your shoes. You have them sign in white ink; then go over the whole surface with colorless nail polish to preserve the precious signatures.

TRICKS FOR TIPS—If you haven't discovered that the tips of your saddle shoe laces are a perfect spot for all kinds of gadgets, you haven't lived. Favorites are colorful plastic dice (through which you drill holes), jingle bells (for which you receive demerits from your home room teacher) and the little rubber balls that come with jack sets (from which you get a new bounce in your step.)

Well, let's not cross any more bridges until they build 'em.

Feudin' About Formals

Those modest Cincinnati teen-agers are at it again. Last summer hundreds of them banded together to ban midriff bathing suits, and now they're on the rampage against strapless formals. Their organization is called the "S. D. S." (they won't tell us what the letters stand for), and they're contacting the fashion editors of Calling All Girls and other national magazines for support. We think it's the strapless formals, not the "S. D. S." that need the most support—although Scotch tape, wired bras, adhesive and colorless nail polish are great aids in disproving the law of gravity. Maybe you don't see eye to eye (or should we say, "shoulder-to-shoulder") with the S. D. S., but, if you do, why not join the movement? Just write to the S. D. S. Representative, Seton High School, Cincinnati 5, Ohio, and apply for membership. If a strapless formal is found in your closet, you're disqualified.

Dead End

Starting clubs is my favorite occupation
My trouble is that they're so fleeting
Although they begin with great acclamation,
They don't last beyond the first meeting.

Wheat Price Perfection?

Do you drool over the fashion photos in the magazines and wonder why those same fashions never look as well on you as they do on the cover girls? What you think you see is a mellow model and a divine dress that seem made for each other. What you really see is a pretty girl and an outfit that were brought together by the trick, artifice and device of the photographer, several assistants and an harassed fashion editor who was wondering all the time the picture was being taken if there were some easier way to make a living. Want to peek behind the scenes?

FAKE FIT—That dress doesn't fit as perfectly as you think. Most likely it is molded to the models' figure by a series of clip clothespins down the back. Or, the dress may be actually slashed down the center back from neck to hem and pinned to fit to the model's slip. Wouldn't you call that "putting on a False Front?"

BEWARE OF FLARES—One way to make a flared skirt look like a merry whirl, is to attach a thin thread to one corner of it. An assistant holds the other end of the thread out of the camera's range and makes the skirt look as if it measured miles around. Wearing a crisp taffeta petticoat under the dress is another way of making a limp skirt look lush. You could try this one in real life.

HEMLINE HYSTERIA—Nowadays the dresses never seem long enough for the models, or may be the models aren't short enough for the dresses. At any rate, you can be sure there's length trouble every time the photographer poses the model bending forward from the waist (that dips the skirt down, see?)—or when the model is snapped in a sitting or leaning position. Cropping the photograph from the hips down is another way of getting around a difficult situation.

Do you still pine to pose, hey?

BPW Commends 12 Foreign Countries

By Genevieve Reynolds

The National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, now in executive committee sessions in New York, this week sent congratulatory letters to 12 foreign governments for enfranchising their women.

Letters written by Miss Sally Butler of Indianapolis, president of the federation, were mailed to the heads of the present governments in Argentina, Albania, Bulgaria, France, Guatemala, Italy, Japan, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, and to Mexico and Bolivia which gave women the vote in municipal elections.

In part the letter read—"Business and professional women of the national Federation of BPWC desire to help more women take advantage of their enfranchisement by gaining government and appointive offices not only in their own countries but in the United States."

Among those attending the three day BPWC meeting in Gotham, which closes today, are several members of the District Club, including Dr. Irma Gene Nevins, president; Miss Marguerite Rawalt, legal adviser, and Dr. Charl Ormond Williams.

Federation Seeks Educational Aid

Meantime, the General Federation of Women's Clubs is launching a drive for educational equipment for war-devastated areas. This week it called upon its 17,000 member clubs to participate in the practical program. The campaign was launched through an article written by Mrs. Theodore S. Chapman of Jerseyville, Ill., for the General Federation Clubwoman, official organ of the federation.

Mrs. Chapman, who is chairman of the federation's education department, called upon the women to contribute school supplies or money, gifts of food and clothing and to sponsor scholarships.

New Book Discusses Clubs and Communism

Are women's organizations susceptible to communistic propaganda? Martin Ebon, former official of the State Department, Office of War Information and Foreign Policy Association, answers the question in a new book, "World Communism Today," which rolls off the presses tomorrow.

The 536-page survey, published by Whittlesey House in New York, warns that Communists attempt to channel much of their efforts through women's clubs, "where there are vocal nonpolitical groups with wide influence and large memberships." He mentions specifically the Women's International Democratic Federation as one target for Communist propagadna.

"Communists are making world-wide efforts to enlist the support of women in their propaganda and agitation," states the author . . . "they have learned to emphasize grievances of minority groups, and although women nowhere actually are a minority in numbers, they fall into the same category.

Pointing out that the Communists have had only limited success in the United States, Mr. Ebon cautions that they still are trying to infiltrate into feminine clubdom, "In many countries they have successfully presented themselves as champions of women's rights," he writes, citing particularly Romania and Bulgaria.

Communist leader Ana Pauker, who recently became Foreign Minister in Romania, also is head of the Romanian affiliate of the Women's International Democratic Federation. Tsola Dragoitcheva, one of the most ruthlessly fanatical of all world Communist leaders today, is Minister of Posts in Bulgaria as well as head of the Communist-controlled Fatherland Front coalition, according to Mr. Ebon.

Another leading Communist woman is Dolores Ibarrui, secretary general of the Spanish Communist Party, who directs underground activity from the southern French city of Toulouse, contends the author.

"Many legitimate grievances, such as inflation and housing shortages, are stressed by Communist propagandists," declared Mr. Ebon. "In the absence of equally strong interests in women's grievances, on the part of other groups, Communists frequently gain control of ostensibly nonpolitical organizations that appeal to the support of women," he says.

But why not read the new tome?

Parties Fill Annapolis' Calendar

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 24.—The Superintendent of the Naval Academy, Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., and Mrs. Holloway were at home on Thursday afternoon to the midshipmen of the First Battalion. A number of young ladies from the Academy and Annapolis, daughters of naval officers and naval instructors, assisted the hostess. Among the 25 or more girls present were the Misses Fay Taylor, Tabitha Field, Dona Zimmerli, Sandra Seabring, Elissa Konigsberg, Vilma J. Oberholtzer, Mary and Susan Rule, Charlotto Ewald, Mollie Heineman and Betsy Mattie. A number of officers and instructors were present and their wives were asked to pour.

On January 20 Admiral and Mrs. Holloway had as their guest at luncheon John Dugdale, M. P., parliamentary and financial secretary of the Admiralty, who visited the Naval Academy for the day. Mr. Dugdale arrived in the United States aboard the Queen Elizabeth January 7, and visited in Washington and Norfolk before leaving Thursday for Bermuda. He was accompanied by Capt. P. W. W. Wooten, R. N., British Naval Attache, and Comdr. J. E. Best, R. N., Assistant Naval Attache.

Highlight of the season for the William H. Murray Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, was the celebration of Gen. Robert E. Lee's birthday on Monday, January 19, the meeting being held at the home of Mrs. Chester Lewis and Miss Ruby Duval, 19 Southgate ave. Speaker for the occasion was John Kieffer, president of St. John's College. A number of special guests were present, and a tea followed the program.

Birthday Party

Red carnations and long red tapers formed the centerpiece of the table at the buffet supper party given on Monday night by Miss Jane Pancoast at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Pancoast, 135 Spa View ave. The occasion marked the birthday of the hostess. Among the guests were the Misses Mary Jane Harder; Camilla, Howard, and Elizabeth McNair; Lieut. Robert G. Martin, USN (DC), and Mrs. Martin, and Lieut. Comdr. Cyrus D. Smith, and Lieuts. (j. g.) J. A. Johnson, Joseph O. Kuebel and Robert Jungklas, all members of the Dental Corps. The party later adjourned to the Officers Town Club to close the evening with dancing.

A representative group of the new and brilliant concert attraction, the Piano Quartet, presented the varied program enjoyed Saturday night, January 17, as part of the Tenth Naval Academy Concert series. The Philharmonic Piano Quartet, composed of four gifted young American artists, delighted a large audience with a program ranging from Bach to boogie-woogie. Members of the quartet are Ada Kopetz, Bertha Melnik, Max Walmer and John Scales.

Following the concert of folk songs given by Miss Susan Reed in McDowell Hall, St. John's College, on Saturday night, an informal dance for students and their guests was held in the junior commons room in the basement of the building. Escorting Miss Reed was Peter Davies, a student and the son of the British Parliament member, Ernest Davies.

MRS. HENRY FOWLER
. . . Florida honeymoon

Miss Ficklin, Mr. Fowler Are Married

Spring flowers provided a setting for the wedding yesterday of Miss Susannah Carne Ficklin and Henry John Fowler. The Rev. John B. Conlon officiated at the ceremony which took place in St Dominic's Catholic Church at 10 a. m.

The bride's foster mother is Miss Eleanor R. Johnson of Washington. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Fowler of Mechanicsville, St. Marys County, Md.

Given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Joseph V. Finotti, the bride wore a gown of ivory satin, and her grandmother's wedding veil of old lace. Her flowers were a bouquet of white roses and orchids.

Miss Ellen McDonald was maid of honor, dressed in aqua blue taffeta and carrying an old-fashioned nosegay. The other attendants, Mrs. James Echols, Mrs. George Gardiner and Miss Margaret McDonald, wore American Beauty taffeta and carried old-fashioned nosegays.

The bride was educated at the Dominican Convent and the bridegroom at Charlotte Hall Military School.

After motoring to Florida, Mr. and Mrs. Fowler will make their home at Horse Range in Mechanicsville.

Charles W. Sydnor, John Royston, Albert S. White and Howard Vesey left Saturday for a hunting trip to Claxton, Ga.

Cairo, Actually Two Cities, Is Greatest in the Arab World

AS A COLORFUL gateway between East and West, Cairo has grown until it holds the dual distinction of being the largest city in Africa and the world's greatest Arab community. Dispatches from the Egyptian capital have reported disturbances following partitioning of Palestine.

In reality Cairo is two cities: the old Cairo of noisy bazaars and dimly lighted, twisting streets with overhanging balconies, and a spacious new city built on European lines.

Modern Cairo has wide boulevards, fine government buildings, European-style hotels, and residences surrounded by walled gardens where palm trees shade rose bushes and flowering hibiscus. Above the flat roofs rise slim minarets, shaded pink or brown.

In the population of one and a third million, men in European dress mingle with Arabs in red fezzes and flowing robes, white-gowned Sudanese from the interior, and an occasional veiled woman with a baby astride her shoulders. Many characters look as if they might have stepped from "The Arabian Nights": lemonade sellers carrying glittering brass urns, boys whose donkeys sometimes wear red saddles and silver necklaces, and newsboys in black skullcaps who sell papers printed in various languages.

During World War II American troops brought a new accent to the babel of tongues. For recreation they liked to ride camels to the nearby Pyramids.

New Travel Movie Has a 'Heart'

IF YOU'RE the club, school, church, convention or veteran type, you may be interested in a new travel film produced for and available through Greyhound Lines here. Entitled "Shortest Way Home," the movie tells the story of how a restless war veteran takes to the road (in a bus, of course) and "discovers all the history and drama to be found along America's great highways." The film runs 33 minutes and there is no rental charge other than shipping costs. It's "available," as they say. Write your local Greyhound office . . . Sun Valley's seventh annual Western Interstate ski meet winds up today . . . Cunard's new cargo liner, Arabia, has completed her maiden voyage, Liverpool to Halifax . . . The first Arabia was a 2400-ton wooden ship with a brig rig (and a reet pleat, no doubt), built in 1852 . . . And if it's statistics you're after, United Air Lines would have you know that from May through December last year its flights carried 16,145 persons between San Francisco and Honolulu.

FOWLER

THE GEORGE SPELVIN Players (now there's an aptly named group) are presenting a series of plays at the Haddon Hall in Atlantic City. The first, scheduled for next weekend, is to be "Junior Miss" . . . The gentleman here is Cruger G. Fowler, the new district traffic manager in Washington for Peruvian National Airways . . . Swedish American Line comes throught with a "booster" on its essay contest, mentioned in these cerulean depths some weeks ago. What you do is write an essay about what you consider the outstanding contribution to American life by an American of Swedish descent. There will be 18 winners, 6 of whom get free trips, all expenses paid, to Scandinavia. Contest ends April 1. Send entries to 636 Fifth ave., New York 20 . . . Our big special advance this week is that horse racing will open in Atlantic City on August 9. You'll have to hurry . . . Franklin Snow has been in town hammering away on a pet project of his—the establishment here of a national railroad museum.

Doris Schaeffer of Phoenix, Ariz., moves in close to take a good look at an orange tree in Arizona's Valley of the Sun

WEEP NOT, if you had your eye on the New Orleans Mardi Gras but failed to write for hotel space. Two travel outfits here—United States Travel Agency and Waters Ideal Tours—are in a position to end your woes. Each will conduct a Pullman-car tour to the gay Crescent City, leaving here on February 6. While in the Mardi Gras league the Pullmans simply will be shunted to sidings, where they will serve as hotels for the members of the tour. Mrs. Laura Waters of Ideal Tours will conduct one party, while W. Barry Jennings will be in the headache department for USTA . . . They're starting the drums a-rumblin' already for the big pilgrimage to Rome and Lourdes, which will be held next summer. American Express-Catholic Travel League is handling the arrangements, August 14 is the sailing date, the ship the Queen Mary, the port of departure New York . . . The great Cairo Agricultural and Industrial Exhibition opens on Gezira Island on February 15. I took this up with an old Cairo of my acquaintance and he says Gezira Isle is strictly quel tres. A veddy posh club, horse track (where they run the wrong way, of course), cricket grounds and—b'gosh—an American football field.

SEVERAL assiduous parties, including Mrs. Ellen S. McKenry of Alexandria, Mrs. W. O. Scruggs of 2833 Naylor rd. se., Walter Hubbard of the American Automobile Association, and a man named Miller, who called up, have given this department the ungarbled word on the coal mine with a road running through it, rather nervously mentioned by us last week. Kind thanks to these good people. Hubbard, being a publicity guy, comes through with a complete bulletin. The mine is located on the outskirts of Pocahontas, Va., 11 miles northwest of Bluefield, W. Va., almost on the State line. As if your being able to drive your car right into the thing weren't enough, you also can observe old and new methods of shoring up roof and sides, old and modern methods of cutting into the sides of the vein, the use of hand- or mule-drawn carts and modern electric engines, and petrified botanical specimens in the ceilings. It is open every day, 10 to 5, no admission charge. The mine is in Tazewell County, Mrs. McKenry's home diggings. This is all most interesting and highly gratifying.

WEDNESDAY is the birthday of Marti, Cuba's George Washington, and the festivities start at 7 a. m. That's a terrible hour . . . More counsel from the AAA: "The average person takes about 18,000 steps each day. One wrong step, in front of a moving motor vehicle, may mean no more 'stepping' the rest of your life. Take it easy—driving or walking—and live" . . . Clint Osborne, the diving expert, will stage a water carnival today at the British Colonial pool in Nassau . . . "Ten Eventful Years," the Encyclopedia Britannica's new four-volume history of the war decade, says the electrified line of the Pennsylvania Railroad between New York and Washington was the busiest stretch of track in the world during World War II. "For four years, 1942 through 1945, it carried nearly 200 million passengers, often more than 200,000 in a single day," it says. "The freight transported during these four war years was approximately 160 million tons."

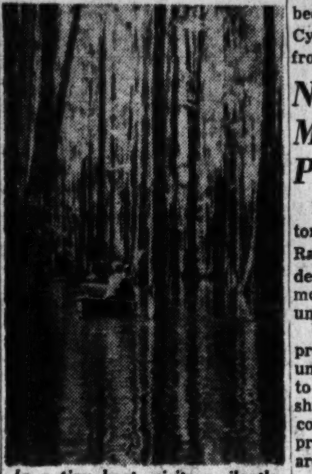
Cypress Gardens a Startling Natural Display

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 24.—Back before the Revolutionary War a great reservoir of water in a cypress forest was used to irrigate the vast acreage of colonial plantations of rice and indigo on the riverbanks of Oakley, S. C., just outside of Charleston. During two centuries the cypresses have grown to become venerable giants, and their strange bark has stained the waters to a silvery black irridescence.

In our own time, an almost endless series of islands and banks throughout the still depths of the water forest have been planted in azaleas, narcissus, lilies, iris, Daphne Odora, Banksia roses and countless other flowers.

This unusual natural display is now known as Cypress Gardens. It is located on U. S. Highway 52. The best view of the gardens may be obtained from one of a hundred boats, paddled by guides to the inner reaches of the forest.

Azaleas find the watershed area especially healthy and grow here to unbelievable heights of 20 feet and more. Reflections in the quiet ebony waters provide an extra-dimensional effect in which the sky and treetops may be seen looking down and in which thousands upon thousands of flowers may be seen completely mirrored in all their brilliant colorations.



In a tiny boat, visitors silently drift through the quiet shades of famed Cypress Gardens near Charleston, S. C.

Many miles of nature trails over embankments and rustic bridges beckon to the naturalist hiker. Cypress Gardens are open in 1948 from January through May.

New Safety Device Makes the Bus Perform Tricks

Boston, Jan. 24 (U.P.).—The Boston, Worcester & New York Street Railway Co. has installed a safety device designed to shut off the motor of a bus and blow the horn under certain conditions.

Called the Robox, the device prevents starting of the vehicle until there is enough air pressure to operate the brakes. It also shuts off the engine should it become overheated or should oil pressure fall below certain standards.

The Robox also will shut off the engine and blow the horn should anyone tamper with the emergency exit of the bus.

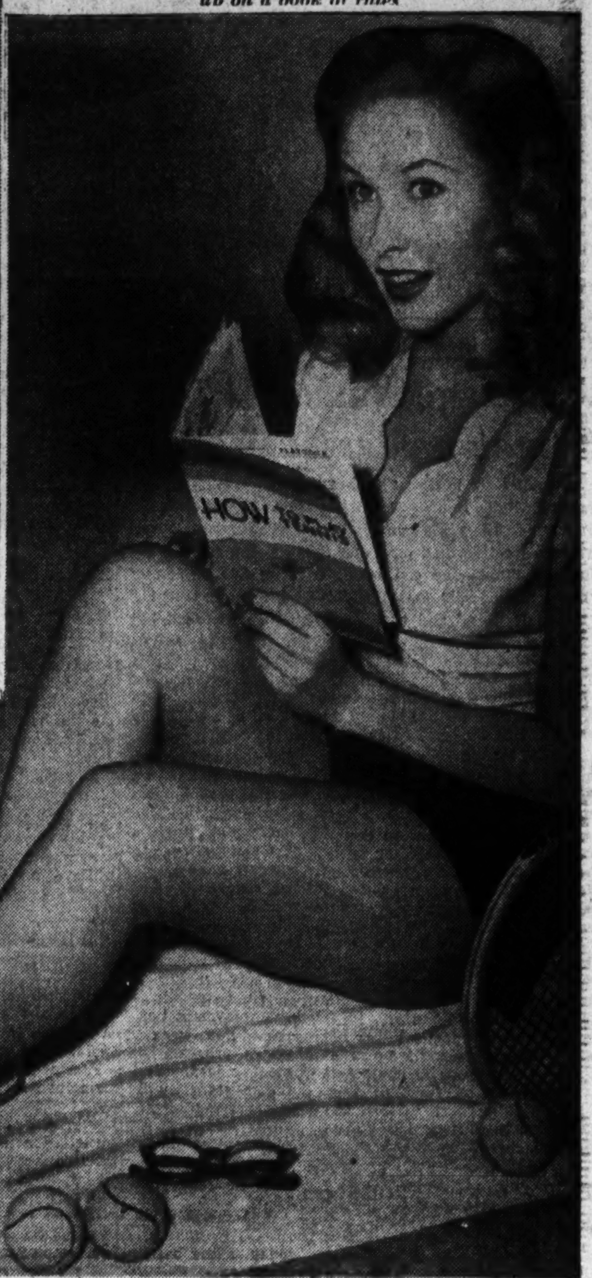
After the Whistle

When the director hollers "Cut!" and the studio whistle blows, the early-rising folk of Hollywood take to their hobbies, which generally touch on their all-important need to keep fit. Penny Edwards, below, has discovered tennis, but before the Warner pin-up girl gets too involved she's boning up on a book of rules



Sydney Greenstreet's hobby is rare china. Here he is with a 400-year-old Chinese figure, a Dresden basket, a Sevres jewel case and a Viennese hand-painted saucer. Ida Lupino is more active, doing handyman's work around her pool to the admiration of one of her many kittens. And Daithre Tuttle, left, is an archery enthusiast

He Gets Some Answers

A Student Queries On State of Theater

By Richard L. Coe

FROM A COLLEGE STUDENT in Pennsylvania come eight questions about the theater. He's writing a survey, he explains, and the questions in themselves are interesting.

They represent a young man's view of the theater and, with his indulgence, we'll answer him in print. He asks:

"Do you feel that the American theater is capable of greater achievements than it is accomplishing at present?"

Unquestionable yes. The American theater's real failing at present is that it reaches so very few people. The theater began as a people's stimulant, both to relax and instruct, and while the movies now reach a vaster audience than the imagination can conjure, the legitimate theater—"round actors"—will not die despite the centuries-old prophecies of its extinction. Spasmodic visits to "key cities"—away from the New York capital—at high costs is the real sign of the theater's lack today. With wider audiences would come the new writers and productions that mean vitality.

"Do you feel that the American theater is experiencing a "culture lag" when one compares the advances of drama with the great advances this country has made diplomatically and industrially in the past few decades?"

This question is like the law school one, "Have you stopped beating your wife?" If by "culture lag" you mean the theater is not doing all it can, the answer probably is yes. Undeniably we have made progress "diplomatically and industrially," but where, after all, is this "progress" leading us? Certainly the theater has advanced in the past few decades from purely diversion to a lively stimulant in its better phases. But in an age of comic books and soap operas, a "cultural lag" is a most tricky gauge to define.

"DO YOU feel that the American theater is too closely bound to the New York stage and would benefit under a more decentralized program?"

Yes, it emphatically would. Such movements as Margo Jones' repertory of Equity players in Dallas, the touring Barter Theater of Virginia and the university theaters scattered across the country are straws in a gathering wind.

"What do you feel are the bad effects of the traditional leadership of the New York stage—and what are the good effects?"

The bad effects we've touched on. But there are good effects which too often are ignored with the headshaking that always goes with this question. It is the New York theater, every time, which comes up with the progressive steps. It took Broadway, in recent years, to go for Orson Welles, William Saroyan and Tennessee Williams. The epochal "Oklahoma!" with its new frontiers for American musicals—our unique contribution in the art of world theater—could have happened only in the maligned commercialism of New York. What do you generally see in the non-professional theaters of the country but outdated Gotham hits? And the summer theater movement, impressive as it is, has done more of the same. No, don't decry New York. What we lack is more of the same.

"Do you feel that the past four decades have witnessed an actual decline in the American theater? If so, why?"

On the contrary. The last four decades have witnessed enormous strides, a revolution. Before the first World War our leading playwrights included Augustus Thomas, Eugene Walter, Charles Klein, David Belasco and Edward Sheldon, and their plays don't begin to compare with those from the '20's to Tennessee Williams. Endless plays were imported from abroad and American playwrights often had a hard time getting a hearing. The star system ruled. True, lacking the competition of the movies, those plays got around more, but since then have come, to name but a few, Eugene O'Neill, Maxwell Anderson, George Kelly, Thorton Wilder, Paul Green and Robert E. Sherwood, all of whose works are acted and respected throughout the world.

"WHEN, in the Nation's Capital, was the American theater most dynamic? What are or were the characteristics of the vigor of this period?"

On Broadway

Lana's Had An Offer Of 10 Grand

By Jack O'Brian

NEW YORK, Jan. 24 (AP).—Lana Turner has been offered $10-000 a week by Nat Harris, owner of a Broadway night club, The Harem . . . "I'll give her a free hand," Harris said, "she can sing, dance or just stand on the stage as a show girl." . . . Gypsy Rose Lee, sometime playwright, took time out from polishing off a new comedy to star in a project for which she is well fitted by her burlesque background: Gypsy'll be the main feature of a big lingerie show being held, of all places, in the Seventy-first Regiment Armory here.

Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein 2d have three of their hits housed in one block now that their "Happy Birthday" has moved to the Plymouth Theater . . . The others are "John Loves Mary" and "Annie Get Your Gun." . . . On January 19, the boys held what might be called a "block party," the date marking the 700th "Annie" performance, the 500th of "Birthday" and the 400th of "J. Loves M."

Back from Philadelphia for one evening to do his hilarious "Woodman Spare That Tree" song at the show business benefit, Bert Lahr was unusually exuberant as he showed friends the box office statement for the first Philly week of "Burlesque." . . . "We grossed almost $22,000," proudly announced Bert. "And we'll do $48,000 for the two weeks."

Leo G. Carroll, Ralph Forbes, Pat Kirkland, Frieda Inescort and Tom Helmore go into the Theater Guild's revival of Shaw's "You Never Can Tell." . . . The latter may be the last Shaw production for a bit, according to our Theater Guild spies, who say that G. B. S. has sent along word that he isn't interested in any more productions of his plays here, what with income taxes chopping off such a generous chunk of his hefty royalties, which are a straight 15 per cent off the top, no matter what a show grosses.

Hottest show tickets in town: "Make Mine Manhattan," "High Button Shoes," "Angel in the Wings," "Man and Superman," "A Streetcar Named Desire," The D'Oyly Carte Troupe, "The Heiress," "The Winslow Boy," "Annie Get Your Gun," "Allegro," although not in that order . . . business in the legit theaters has bounced back in healthy style after an alarming slump, during which only two shows sold out.

"Civilization" became the biggest song hit in the country even while drama critics were calling the score of "Angel in the Wings," in which revue the ditty is featured, somewhat inconsequential. Now the aisle seat rock-throwers will have to eat some more of their musical notes.

Ricky and David Are Likable

Keep All Brats Off Air (Except Ozzie's)

By John Crosby

"THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE AND HARRIET" (WTOP-CBS, 9:30 p. m. Fridays), one of the brightest and wittiest comedies now on the air, is also one of the hardest to write about.

Their program is a domestic comedy which in its general outlines is not much different from all the other husband-and-wife routines —"Blondie," "Ethel and Albert," "Fibber McGee and Molly"—but in tone it is quite different. Ozzie is the boastful, credulous, sleepy, earnest, sentimental, altogether human husband. Harriet is his dry, sensical, occasionally biting, altogether human wife. In addition they have a couple of children named Ricky and David who are the most credible, likable and funny youngsters on the air.

That is quite a recommendation. Children are a great and, I suppose, necessary institution, but they don't come off happily on the air. One young couple I know, who had a third child in the discussion stage, heard Margaret O'Brien on the radio at a psychologically unpropitious moment and reconsidered. If the human race is to survive, children should be seen but not heard, particularly on the air. Ricky and David are exceptions.

The story in the Ozzie and Harriet show revolves around Ozzie. Ozzie fancies himself a hunter or he discovers that women make a fuss over him or he tries in his bumbling way to do a good turn for a fellow on Thanksgiving. Inevitably he is discomfited. That's all there is to it. It sounds like a simple routine and it also sounds like an old one. Well, it is. But the Ozzie and Harriet show is considerably redeemed both by its writing and by the personalities involved.

He Writes and Supervises

OZZIE consistently underwrites his comedy. Most radio comedy is horribly overwritten under the mistaken assumption that if you don't hit 'em over the skull with it, they won't understand it. Ozzie very carefully treads the thin line between farce and comedy, preserving all the laughter of farce without losing the credibility of comedy.

Nelson resists the impulse to go after cheap and easy laughs. He never labors a point. He keeps his comedy moving briskly and he changes its direction so skillfully and so often that you never quite know what's coming next. It's quite a trick.

In addition to being a sensible and talented writer, Ozzie Nelson is a fetching actor, with a great many of the qualities of Jimmy Stewart and a very complete grasp on the fundamentals of radio acting. In fact, Nelson is a very remarkable fellow. He started out as a saxophone player and band leader. He has become one of the most promising radio comics. Looking back on the Nelson career, I feel there may be hope for Rudy Vallee yet.

His wife, once the featured singer in his band, is not only one of the prettiest girls in radio but also one of the most charming.

Our Ingenious Ad Men

THE advertising fraternity, a high-strung group whose brains work three ways like cold tablets, has been exhibiting unusual mental activity recently. Even at normal speed an ad man's mind operates around the genius level, and when he is deeply stirred his mind shoots out sparks like the Aurora Borealis—long, shimmering streamers of thought in four colors. It's an impressive and terrifying sight to see an ad man thinking hard.

The intellectual ferment among ad men lately has been considerable and I have here a little file of the brighter sparks generated by this high-powered activity. Here's one from Austin, Tex. When Lux Theater presented "Nobody Lives Forever," a representative of a funeral parlor in Austin hurried over to the local station to purchase spot announcements following and preceding the show.

An ad agency is preparing a radio show for a company that makes hearing aids. This presented what might be described as the ultimate problem in radio advertising. In the last 27 years the ad men have just about licked the problem of how to make a man, who can hear, listen to something he doesn't want to hear. But to make a man listen to something he can't hear, well, sir, that is a dilemma your real ad man likes to grapple with. Here's how they solved it. The commercials will be aimed at friends of the deaf, who will be urged to send in the names of the afflicted. Information about the hearing aid will be mailed to these people. If you think you can escape radio commercials simply because you can't hear, you're crazy.

Plan for the Blind

CROSSING over to the serious side for a change here, the American Foundation for the Blind is campaigning for funds to provide a radio for every blind person in America who cannot afford one. Clifton Fadiman, chairman of the radio fund, points out in his appeal that, to a blind person, a radio is as necessary as food, clothing or lodging. It's the blind man's newspaper, the blind man's book, the blind man's contact with the outside world. The cost of each radio is $15, but the fund will welcome any part of that. The address: American Foundation for the Blind, 15 W. 16th st., New York City. I can't think of a worthier cause.

A Footlights Barrister

Calhern Gets Along With the Law

By Lucius Beebe

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Louis Calhern, now laboring in a play called "The Survivors" at the Playhouse here, has been in the courts of law for enough of his professional career to have an edge on being known as a footlights barrister. In "The Survivors," a new play about Missouri in the post-bellum times of the semi-frontier, Calhern is the small-town lawyer whose dramatic function is the equalizing influence between two parties of hot-tempered, feuding individualists.

The last time this department skirmished with Calhern he was sporting the splendid bristling mustaches of Mr. Justice Holmes in "The Magnificent Yankee." In a drama even prior to this exposure to the learned deliberations of bench and bar, Calhern played a brilliant British barrister in "Give Me Yesterday."

He thinks that by the time "The Survivors" has had any sort of run he may be able to stand for examination for the bar.

He Had to Ask

"I'LL TELL you the truth, however," says Calhern, "and that is that when I played the part in 'Give Me Yesterday' I had to ask what is the difference, please, between a barrister and a solicitor. That's how much I know about law and is offered as bona-fide evidence that I am not being type cast. I don't know a habeas corpus from a nol prosse, and doubt if, at my age, there is time to learn. Being any sort of lawyer, small-town practitioner as I am in 'The Survivors', or a Supreme Court justice like Mr. Holmes, is just a job of acting work for me. It doesn't come easily or naturally or have any feeling for the law behind it. Trying to get a parking tag fixed would be a major tax on my legal capacities."

"The Survivors" is a period costume melodrama which concerns itself with life in Decker City, Mo., when the men start getting back from the Civil War. Do they settle back to a life of peace, prosperity and usefulness, working their farms and ranches, mending neglected fences and renewing interrupted family and communal lives?

They do not. They simply keep their Army weapons loaded to be used in reviving old feuds, quarrels and enmities. In this Hatfield-McCoy midst Calhern attempts to assert the reason and intelligence that are part of his legal background to prevent wholesale shootings and assassinations based on almost forgotten provocations.

No Student He

"NO, I'm not any profound student of Midwestern Americana in the post-Civil War period," Calhern deposes. "About my only contact with Missouri at all has been a few one-night stands on the road and going to high school in St. Louis, and I doubt if that qualifies me as an expert on the border legends of the Midwest or its customs and manners. About my closest contact with the Missouri countryside has been at the bar of the Plaza, on the edge of the park there. A very estimable institution, but not to be confused with the research department of the Library of Congress.

"Actually, of course, all the research of the play was done by Peter Viertel and Irwin Shaw, the authors, and unless an actor were specially interested in a period or place he still can do a good job of work in it without being a student simply by virtue of his business and profession of being an actor."

The day the reporter sought out Calhern backstage at the Playhouse, where rehearsals for "The Survivors" were under way, the management was making a series of hasty calls on Francis Bannerman & Sons and other historic firearms dealers around town in search of a Sharps or Henry rifle, it having been pointed out by interested bystanders that the highpower bolt-action hunting rifle which is a prop in one of the big scenes didn't fit into the period design with reassuring accuracy. "Not an arequebus, not a demiculverin," a stage manager was screaming at an assistant, "just an ordinary single-shot Sharps rifle like General Grant would use!"

Good Thing

"It's a good thing there is some atmospheric character to my part as Lawyer Keyes," Calhern says, "at least a backwoods costume for the time, because they've gone and taken away my mustaches behind which I have hidden most of my professional lifetime. In nine plays out of 10 Calhern wears whiskers, while every one else is clean shaved. Now every one on the stage has beards, sideburns, whiskers and wigs except Calhern. It's a conspiracy! Every one knows I can't go on the stage like Noel Coward or Sidney Howard or Philip Merivale and just play myself without a character to hide behind. Alfred Lunt and I agreed that we are eccentric that way: we even make character roles out of straight parts as a sort of self-defense."

It is generally understood that the authors of "The Survivors" are not so much specific in the implications of their play as they are writing a Western melodrama which, if the auditor chooses, may be applicable to the confused and perilous world situation today.

"Generally speaking, I prefer a play that is explicit in what it has to say and am distrustful of plays with 'messages'," says Calhern. "I feel as Humphrey Bogart once remarked, 'If you've got a message, send for Western Union.' This play, however, has the advantage of being an excellent and highly colored melodrama of local feuds and hatreds and shooting in a picturesque period of our national history, and nobody has to pay any attention to the allegory if they don't want to. Take it or leave it is the authors' attitude, and that seems to me good business and sound showmanship combined."

Ruth Writes Off Triumph As Overtime

By Aline Mosby

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 24 (U.P.)—Ruth Warrick, actress, today claimed the title of champion face-on-the-cutting-room-floor, female division. She's the first female contender, too. There's been a couple in the male division.

The late W. C. Fields "yaas-my-chickadeed" himself clean out of "Tales of Manhattan" because he was too funny for the rest of the picture. Jack Oakie's antics in Charlie Chaplin's "The Great Dictator" were squelched because he was too funny for Chaplin.

A couple of years ago, the way Miss Warrick told us, Enterprise Studio decided the role of Kate in "Arch of Triumph" should be almost as grand as Joan's part, which Ingrid Bergman hooked.

The ballyhoo the studio churned up over Kate was the loudest to see the light of newsprint in at least two days. The script called for Kate to have an operation, die of TB, and do all sorts of wan and tragic things.

To make sure she felt and looked like sophisticated Kate, Miss Warrick paid heavy dough for a new outfit to wear in her test. Everything from custom-made undies, to make her feel swank, to a mink coat, to make her look same.

It was worth it, or so she figured then. Charles Boyer, the leading man, saw Ruth's test and hollered, "That's Kate."

For five—count 'em, five—months Ruth emoted in Boyer's clutch and collected a fat paycheck. The director declared her acting superb. The movie was sneak-previewed in Connecticut and everybody said Miss Warrick was wonderful, just wonderful.

There was, however, one little item wrong with the picture. It was too long—two hours too long.

Back to the cutting-room went the four-hour film. After the guys with the shears finished, almost all of Kate was swept out in front of the janitor's long-handled brush.

And that's Hollywood.

A College Student Gets Some Theater Answers

A born New Yorker who has lived in Washington 17 years hesitates to answer this in public. It was certainly dynamic in the years immediately before the recent war. Though we then had only one theater—the Belasco being moribund—one can recall exciting first nights of "Porgy and Bess," "Show Boat," "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," "Idiot's Delight" and that curiously unappreciated but superior musical, "Knickerbocker Holiday." This season has brought us but two really new plays, both imports, the one a quick failure, the other the moving, memorable "The Winslow Boy." But the vigor that seems lacking in Washington's offerings is only a reflection of a condition prevalent in the theater everywhere.

"Could Washington support more theaters and absorb more theatrical culture than it does at present? If so, what do you feel are the chief reasons this situation has not been remedied?"

It could—if there were the plays available. But the paradox of our one-theater town is that booking tangles are such that more productions are needed everywhere. We went into this several weeks ago, but certainly one of the chief reasons for the situation lies with a lack of leadership and with Washingtonians themselves.

Though this has been called a city of nomads, it's also a large city of nomads and of intelligent, cultured nomads who all too often must indulge their theatrical tastes in New York or even the other tryout towns of Baltimore, Wilmington and Philadelphia. Probably the most striking aspect of this depressing feature is the fact that there are monied people here in the capital who, if approached properly, could chip in a hundred thousand each and present the nation with a splendid theater. What's needed here to lead the way is a monied enthusiast with theatrical know-how, diplomacy and great patience.

"WHAT do you feel is the basic purpose of theater and how well in your area does your theater answer this purpose?"

The age-old answer to this is "To Entertain"—but don't think that means to lull. It also means to stimulate, to exalt. But—no matter how the longhairs may sneer about the perennial returns of, say, tonight's "The Student Prince," the warhorses, too, have their place in the theater. Thousands will be seeing this 23-year-old musical this week because they like it, because to them it's theater just as much as to others only the avant-garde is theater. There's room for everything in the theater, which is as it should be.

The National's generally full schedule proves it does all it can. But the fact that some people don't relish the spate of musicals we've had this season and the fact that some Washingtonians cannot go to the theater also indicates there's a lot to be done for theater in the nation's capital.

Pop Gets Rich as Pants Fall

Hollywood, Jan. 24 (AP).—Walter (Pop) Guedel earns a handsome living partly by letting his pants fall down once a week in front of 352 people.

It's 10 seconds of 6 o'clock here any Friday evening. "People Are Funny," is about to hit the air. Pop Guedel, 62, a one-time school-teacher with a bald dome, big glasses, a meandering mustache and the pink cheeks of a mellow Washington Delicious apple, stands onstage clutching his pants waist.

He raises his hands overhead to lead the applause. His pants fall to his ankles, showing white shorts. The audience gasps, then howls hysterically. And listeners get the idea that they're having a very good time watching the show.

For this indignity and sundry other duties as assistant producer, Guedel, who was broke and jobless during the depression, earns $500 a week. And he loves it.

San Antonio to Have Play Festival

San Antonio, which may have been a bit jealous of the theatrical figure being cut by Dallas through the work of Margo Jones, now is having a four-week drama festival of its own. It began January 5. Lily Cahill, prominent actress on Broadway and the road for many years, is directing the venture.

The festival is expected to lay the foundation for a permanent professional acting group that will play a full season in San Antonio each winter. Ten Broadway players will form the nucleus of this season's company and among them will be Peggy Wood in "Ned McCobb's Daughter," Ernest Truex in "George Washington Slept Here," Muriel Kirkland in "The Barrets of Wimpole Street," and Miss Cahill in "The Marquise."

Capital for the festival, housed in the Jefferson Auditorium, was subscribed by business and social leaders of the community. It is a nonprofit organization.

Student Prince Opens Tonight At National

"THE STUDENT PRINCE" now celebrating its twenty-third anniversary with a cross-country tour, comes to the National Theater tonight for an engagement of eight days ending with a matinee and evening performance next Sunday. The usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees will prevail.

On a misty autumn evening in 1924, "The Student Prince" was introduced to the public. Arriving on Broadway without the usual fanfare and excitement which attends most first nights, billed simply as a musical play, "The Student Prince" was acclaimed and standing room only prevailed for many weeks. When the curtain fell on that first night, the audience realized it had been present at a production that would make theatrical history and they were right.

Perhaps it was the music, the most melodious ever composed by that master of melody, Sigmund Romberg. Perhaps it was the story, the tender romantic tale of a prince's love for a pretty little waitress. Perhaps it was the magnificant costuming, the atmosphere of Old World splendor. Perhaps it was the splendid male chorus whose contribution to this play was soon to be famous. Perhaps it was—any number of things, but whatever it was, "The Student Prince" was an an overnight success.

Nothing travels more quickly than the news that a play is a hit, and soon the Messrs. Shubert were besieged with requests from theaters all over the country to sent companies on tour. A second company was immediately put into rehearsals and opened at the Great Northern Theater in Chicago, where it ran for 59 consecutive weeks, a record which stands to this day.

Third, fourth and fifth companies were organized and toured throughout the United States while other companies opened in foreign lands.

LAHR PLAYMATE: Gail Garber, one of the girls in Comedian Bert Lahr's National-bound "Burlesque." Despite its title, this George Manker Watters-Arthur Hopkins play is a straight drama of backstage life, though the final act does contain a brief taste of the real thing as it was when the play was written 20 years ago. The current revival, again directed by Co-author Hopkins, has just completed a year's run in New York and opens here a week from tomorrow night

Film's Western Tunes In Musical Library

Hollywood. — Western Musical Library, historical association, which collects old Western ballads and tunes, has added the entire score of Paul Sawtell's music for Enterprise's "They Passed This Way" to its files.

The musical score for the film, which Sawtell composed, is based on old railroading ditties as well as saloon and barrack room ballads of the 70s and 80s. The music was recorded on special sound tape for the library in San Francisco.

Children to See 'Sleeping Beauty' Next Saturday

"Sleeping Beauty" will be presented next Saturday by the Clare Tree Major Children's Theater of New York. This play is another in the series brought here by The Children's Museum of Washington. There will be performances at 10:30 a. m., and at 2 p. m., both at the Lisner Auditorium.

"Sleeping Beauty" is a lovely fairy tale of the princess who is cast under the spell of 100 years sleep.

Tickets may be obtained by writing The Children's Museum, Western ave. at Military rd. nw., Washington 15, enclosing check and self-addressed stamped envelope. Prices are $1.80, $1.20 and 60 cents.

'T-Men' Released With O'Keefe in Lead

"T-Men," Edward Small's dramatic film story based on actual records in the Treasury Department files, demonstrating the methods used in obtaining convictions against such notorious lawbreakers as Al Capone, has been released by Eagle Lion Films.

The film stars Dennis O'Keefe in the role of a Treasury agent who goes under cover to join a gang of criminals in order to gather the evidence he needs to convict them of smuggling and counterfeiting. Balance of the cast includes Jane Randolph, June Lockhart, Alfred Ryder, Mary Meade and Wally Ford.

Four Openings Slated in N. Y.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24 (AP).—Four premieres are scheduled for Broadway this week.

Monday, at the Century Theater, the D'Oyly Carte Company of London presents "The Gondoliers," Gilbert and Sullivan.

Tuesday, at the Belasco, James Russo and Michael Ellis will present "The Last Dance," an adaptation of Strindberg's satire, "Dosdancen." Oscar Homolka, Jessie Royce Landis, Philip Bourneuf and Anne Jackson are featured.

Wednesday, at the Broadway, "The Cradle Will Rock," will try for a run once again.

Thursday, at the Adelphi, a George Abbott musical, "Look Ma, I'm Dancing," will arrive with Nancy Walker starred. The idea for the proceedings was suggested by Jerome Robbins, who had a similar thematic whim with the successful "On The Town"; Robbins also will be in charge of the dances. Hugh Martin wrote the score, Jerome Lawrence and Robert Lee the book and Oliver Smith designed the sets. The cast also numbers Alice Pearce of the night clubs, and Harold Lang, Janet Reed and Katherine Sergava.

Cromwell Ready

Director John Cromwell has given the signal for camera work to start on RKO Radio's "The Baltimore Escapade." Barbara Bel Geddes, just returned to Hollywood after a New York vacation, has a top role.

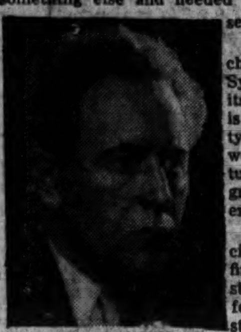
Symphony Drive Begins February 3

By Paul Hume

A WEEK AGO we wrote of the great need for a musical conservatory of stature in Washington. There was a time, not too long ago, when Washington needed something else and needed it even more than a conservatory.



DR. KINDLER

That was a symphony orchestra. Today the National Symphony Orchestra is in its seventeenth season, and is the core of our community's musical life. Without it we would have little opportunity to hear first hand the greatest body of musical literature in current usage.

Without it our choral societies and churches would find it difficult to secure instrumental players for their festival concerts; our young students would be forced elsewhere to a greater extent than they are now; the programs of the National Gallery, Phillips Gallery and Library of Congress would be affected, and some of these are among the finest concerts in America today.

The City Is Richer

WITHOUT an orchestra which Washington can consider its own, we would not be nearly as familiar with the writings of many of today's leading composers. Within the past seven seasons, the National Symphony has played music by Barber, Bartok, Bernstein, Bergma, Britten, Copland, Creston, Delius, Hindemith and Holst. And that accounts for only a small part of the alphabet. They have given us also the violin concertos of Walton, Prokofieff, Bartok and Vaughan Williams, and piano concertos of Delius, Nordoff, Strauss and Villa-Lobos.

Through their generosity we have heard many of the world's leading artists of the piano, violin, cello and other solo instruments. These together with that solid foundation of orchestral staples which go to make up every listener's background of musical knowledge, have been offered to National Symphony subscribers.

Stop and consider just when the orchestra was started: January, 1931. If the depth of the economic depression had not been reached, it was well on the way. Music was to become one of the major luxuries during succeeding years. Yet it was at that time that a determined group of citizens realized the importance of an orchestra to any city of substance, enlisted the talents of Hans Kindler, and founded the National Symphony Orchestra.

No Exception Here

BUT A SYMPHONY orchestra is notoriously unprofitable. The major orchestras of the country operate at a deficit. And the National Symphony is no exception. Various sources are drawn upon to cover these deficits. Philadelphia has an endowment of sufficient size to cover losses. In addition, royalties from recordings bulwark the bank account very tidily.

Other orchestras have other angels and royalties in varying amounts. The National Symphony, as one of the younger symphonies of the country, does not yet have the prestige of years of recording behind it, and therefore does not command royalties in amounts comparable to those of some of the larger orchestras.

The National Symphony also lacks the possibility of civic support in the sense that Baltimore's orchestra enjoys it, where municipal authorities appropriate funds to help the orchestra. Here in Washington such assistance can come only from Congress, and legislative ears seem remarkable insensitive to the sounds of music.

$165,000 Needed

SO IT IS that the National Symphony must take their financial problems to the people of Washington. They are launching a fund-raising campaign next week. Their goal: $165,000. Furthermore, this amount is an absolute necessity. Last year the orchestra asked for $10,000 more than this year's goal, but got only $143,000. They were able to open the present season thanks to the generosity of some of their most constant friends.

Now faced with a deficit of $17,000 from last year, $18,000 more from the past Water Gate series, and a loss on the current series of about $30,000, they have no choice in looking to next year: either they reach their $165,000 goal, or they return everything short of that amount to those who offer it, and close up shop.

(The $165,000 is divided as follows: 80.2 per cent, or $132,330, for orchestra, conductor and soloists' fees, and rentals; 7.9 per cent, or $13,035, for administrative; 5.6 per cent, or $9240, for advertising; 3.6 per cent, or $5940, for miscellaneous, and 2.7 per cent, or $4456, for campaign expenses. The orchestra's management has steadily declined to break down the first item in greater detail, though they ask the people of Washington to foot the bill.)

Steady Progress

WE WOULD not like to contemplate a Washington concert season without an orchestra. To be sure, no concert-goer in this or any other city always agrees with any one conductor in matters of either repertoire or performance. There are always pet works which we would like to hear, and differing opinions about interpretations of old and new works.

The progress of the National Symphony Orchestra under Hans Kindler has brought it, notably during the present season, to the finest heights of its career. The loss of an orchestra would set our cultural life back decades at a time when Washington must go forward or stop trying to act like a big city in the realm of the arts.

Guild Offers Puccini This Week

WASHINGTON OPERA GUILD brings months of planning to action this Wednesday and Thursday with their Lisner Auditorium performance of Puccini's operatic triptych.

Assisted by members of the Arlington Civic Symphony, and under the direction of that orchestra's conductor, Van Lier Lanning, the Guild will present singers who won their roles in auditions last summer. Washington singers William Groff, Blanche Alexander, Carroll Mattoon, Shirley Winston, and others, will appear. The operas will be presented on two evenings, with completely different casts, permitting the use of more singers than would otherwise be possible.

MUSICAL events of special interest this week include Premiere of Robert Ward's second symphony this afternoon by Kindler and the orchestra; Milhaud's first quartet played by the Tomasow quartet tonight at the National Gallery; Suzanne Bloch, illustrious daughter of a famous composer, tomorrow evening at the Phillips; the return of Jacques Thibaud, ranking French violinist, Tuesday with the Philadelphia, and the concert this afternoon at the Chevy Chase Woman's Club by the Ajemian sisters, Maro the pianist having introduced the Khatchaturian piano concerto to this country six years ago.

Nor will many Washingtonians overlook our first concert from Licia Albanese, reigning Metropolitan diva, Thursday evening, C. Hall.

Plans for a new civic orchestra, to be conducted by Charles Dana Beaschler, are to be discussed tomorrow at 8 p. m. at New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. Performances in the near future are already set, and such familiar Washington institutions as the Gault string ensemble, the artist players of the Friday Morning Music Club, and the newly formed National Civic Opera Company are linked in publicity blurbs. Those interested in the new orchestra should trek over to the church tomorrow night.

ALEXANDER

LANNING

Washington music teachers meet tomorrow evening at the Willard, with discussions on principles of pedagogy: organ, piano and voice. (Wish I could go.) 7:30 p. m. Open forum, and no field needs open foruming more.

Throughout the country, the next four weeks will be marked with performances of music by Jewish composers, with most of the nation's leading musical organizations headlining appropriate works. One of the first of these concerts is scheduled this evening by the Washington Jewish Folk Chorus, at the Cafritz Auditorium.

WORD came late, but most welcome, of a concert next Friday evening by Richard Dyer-Bennet, folk song singer of renown. It is set for 8:30 p. m., in the Asbury Methodist Church, a benefit for the Interracial Nursery School.

Rehearsals for the National Lutheran Chorus are on Monday evenings, 8 p. m., Luther Place Memorial Church, 14th and N sts. nw. Singers interested in joining the chorus are invited to meet at the church.

Taking Pictures

How the Amateur Pix Clicker Can Pick Up a Little Money

By Ollie Atkins

Furniture and other household properties will be found of great use in giving subjects something to do. This picture of Toni Tucker, 54 Rhode Island ave. ne., was greatly enhanced by the unusual tea set in the picture. It's a Speed Graphic shot on 4x5 Type B Super Panchro Press film with one peanut flash bulb high to the right of the camera—exposure 1-25th at F-22.

No part-time fan will get rich or even make a living clicking pictures. But a few sales can help defray expenses and will certainly boost one's interest.

But just what pictures are saleable and how much is a picture worth? Most photographers think first of newspapers for picture markets and it is true that many amateurs find the papers a good place to sell pictures. Daily papers throw dozens of good pictures in the trash cans and file many others for lack of space to publish them.

Pictures for newspaper use must be dramatic, well done technically and turned in promptly, usually to the city editor. Prices for newspaper pictures run from $3 to $5.

Another market for the part-time photographer is the magazine field. Don't try to shoot for spots over your head. Cover assignments for the big time books are out of your class. Stick to pictures you like to make. There are many markets for good pictures of "baby" or "pet pussy cat" and hundreds of editors constantly search for the right picture to illustrate a certain story—your well-made picture of tiny-tot Trudy bawling behind the bars in her crib may be the exact illustration the editor of "Our Family" needs to bring out a story he has on child psychology. You'll get prices from $10 to $50 for really good magazine pictures.

Do not send in contact prints. Submit only well made projections at least 8 by 10 inches in size and trim off the white borders. Be sure to enclose caption material.

A photographer I know once made a swell picture of his attractive girl friend cleverly posed under an umbrella during a spring shower. This picture netted him $50 from an umbrella manufacturer, who used the picture, with permission of the young lady, in advertising.

If you will maintain moderate prices and do reasonably good work, friends and neighbors will be delighted to have you make candid series of pictures showing their children, weddings, picnics, family reunions, etc. Turn in your finished work displayed in a nice looking folder, many types of which are available for a small cost at the camera shops.

A BEAUTIFUL selection of color photographs on the Library of Congress is in the current edition of "Holiday," under the credit of Harris & Ewing. It is the work of Thomas J. O'Halloran, 15 Seaton pl. ne., who made and processed the layout in Ektachrome.

To heat up chemicals to correct degree of temperature during these cold days use an aquarium immersion heater, which may be purchased at any pet shop. These electrical gadgets cost about $2.20 and serve very well in the photo lab.

An exhibition of photographs depicting "Louisiana Plantation Architecture" by Clarence Laughlin will continue through February 3 at Phillips Memorial Gallery, 1600 21st st. nw., Washington. This showing of pictures is interesting not only for the architectural points illustrated but because of the ghostly quality Laughlin introduces by means such as multiple exposure and apparition effects.

PLANS for a new type of photographic school are being considered by Harry Frohman, 4200 Kaywood dr., Mount Rainier, Md., who hopes to open a professional laboratory and training school for students interested in becoming studio photographers.

Frohman has plans drawn and is looking for a location. I was interested to learn that he does not pretend to turn out color photographers, news cameramen or high salaried advertising photographers, but is concentrating on what might be described as the "home town portrait photographer." Formerly with the Allen J. Lewis portrait syndicate, Frohman has also been connected with New York studios and been active with the Bronx Photographers' Association and the New York Professional Photographers' Association.

The National Photographic Society announces that Dr. Jaffe's portrait class will meet Wednesday at 8:15 p. m. The session will be at Dr. Jaffe's home and open only to members of the society. Special models will pose.

MRS. BRUCE ROBERTS, chairman of District Red Cross Arts and Skills unit, says there is immediate need for trained photographers, amateur and professional, for daytime volunteer work at Forest Glen section of Walter Reed Hospital. The day will be suited to the convenience of photographers and the work would be training commercial photographers. Call Republic 8300, extension 762.

Classes in photographic subjects offered by the U. S. Department of Agriculture begin the week of February 2 and registration is now going on. Courses are open to non-Federal employes as far as facilities permit. The following courses are offered during the spring semester: "Fundamentals of Photography I" by Briggs; "Practice of Photography I" by Briggs; "Fundamentals of Photography II' by Cobb; "Practice of Photography II' by Purdy and Koch; "Color Photography—Practice" by Mohr, and "Portrait Photography" by Purdy.

Radio Goes to School

High Brass Gets Learnin'

By Sonia Stein

"WOULD you like to teach radio again?" asked the boss.

"No," said the man.

"Er, well now . . ." said the boss.

HUBBEL

So the man did. And from one course in radio writing, which he undertook reluctantly, Gordon Hubbel, director of program operations at WMAL, now finds himself supervising with enthusiasm a whole department of radio courses at American University.

Not yet three years old, the department is already extensive enough to offer a major in radio and television leading to a B. S. degree. From one class with 34 students in '45, it has grown to eight classes with an average of 27 students to each class, and has been flattered by the enrollment of many people already connected with the industry.

The television course attracted what guest-lecturer Worthington C. Minor, manager of CBS television, called "the most adult and intelligent of any group of this kind I have so far encountered."

Very High Types

THE intelligent adults include Dr. Paul Douglass, president of American University; Samuel H. Kauffmann, president of the Evening Star Broadcasting Co., which operates WMAL and its television station; writers for radio trade magazines, etc.

Radio Sales was given this semester by Maurice Mitchell, newly appointed manager of WTOP.

One of the most informative courses given this fall, in spite of the fact that it was well spiced with Mitchell ancedotes about square clothespins, con games, advertising gimmicks and advertisers hoist on their own arguments, Radio Sales was taught to a class composed almost entirely of people already employed in selling radio advertising, managing stations or writing about radio.

Because Mitchell and the top-flight lecturers imported from New York for the television course will be unavailable next semester, neither of these courses will be offered. But Hubbel expects to have them back in the fold next fall.

Registration Starting

A RADIO Policies and Regulations course to be offered next semester will be taught by Erich Saxl, senior attorney of the Federal Communications Commission's litigation division. With legislation now pending in Congress which may materially affect such policies and regulations, the course is apt to be peopled with very high radio brass.

Counseling and registration for the coming semester begins tomorrow. Hubbel or his assistant, Mrs. Hallie Margaret Umphress, will be available at 1901 F st. nw., where most of the classes are held, every day next week from 3 to 5:30 p. m. and the following week from 2 to 6:30 p. m. Next Saturday counseling will be given from 10 a. m. to 3 p. m.

New students are encouraged to register the second week. The semester begins on February 6.

Before American University undergraduates are eligible for any of the courses mentioned above or for announcing, acting or dramatic writing courses, they have certain requirements to meet. If they are to major in radio they take English, history, government, science, economics, etc.—courses selected by Hubbel on the basis of what he wishes he had when he embarked on a radio career.

"I would suggest all the English literature and writing courses and social studies possible," he says. "If you can't write simple English you can't write for radio."

And since Hubbel believes in training students to be able to work in big, metropolitan stations, he stresses the importance of knowing about government and international affairs so that a future announcer can make intelligent remarks if he has to fill 20 minutes of air time unexpectedly at the opening of Congress or at a U. N. session.

Lo, He Learned

AFTER the student has a reasonably good background, Hubbel lets him get into actual radio courses, starting with Art of Radio Broadcasting, which he teaches with the help of visiting specialists in each phase of broadcasting. "It's funny, but the first few times I sat through the lectures I learned some things, too, although the course deals in basic radio facts." (Hubbel is now going through it for the seventh time, since American University has three semesters each year.)

Radio news writing, continuity writing, microphone technique and music planning are also required. Many of the courses are taught by WMAL department heads, since that station presents the courses in cooperation with the university, but Hubbel always looks for the best man for the course no matter in what station he finds him.

"Although there are over 300 colleges offering radio courses, and about 32 giving degrees in radio, this is the only one I know of which is taught by professional radio people," Hubbel says with pride, and he clearly won't take chances with it.

Even the students are carefully screened, since Hubbel sees no point in encouraging someone clearly unsuited to radio work.

So far the results have been gratifying if ironic; students often leave in the middle of a course—because they've been offered jobs. Two GIs and the wife of one of them took all the radio courses being offered in one semester amongst them, and then went off and opened a radio station.

It's 'Queen for a Day' At Uline's Tomorrow

IS YOUR blood running blue these days? Do you have any earmarks of royalty?

For an investment of $1.80, you (the ladies, that is) can get a chance (one chance in 7000, that is) to be "Queen for a Day" when the Mutual radio show moves into Washington tomorrow.

Uline Arena, which can seat some 7000 pretenders to the throne, is selling tickets of admission to the broadcast at $1.80 a head.

Seats will not be reserved. From 1 to 2 p. m., the contestants will be chosen from among the women assembled, and from 2 until 2:30 the show will be on the air. There will be some warmup before the actual broadcast, as is customary with all radio shows.

Although selling tickets to broadcasts is not unheard of, it isn't very common, and WOL, which carries the show in Washington, is holding its head in its hands because it cannot offer free tickets to listeners.

The queen, chosen by a board of judges, is usually given a vacation trip, clothes and whatever else her heart desires. One queen was sent to London for the festivities surrounding the princess' wedding. Another got a chinchilla coat.

But, possibly in recognition of the ephemeral quality of the honor bestowed, Emcee Jack Bailey has also given away such workaday items as kitchen stoves, cows, tractors and a picket fence.

COMPTON

Compton, who has a daily news telecast, was "the first fully accredited news correspondent in television" and was director of news and special events for WOL before he went into television.

Leslie Arries, who was WTTG manager, has been placed in charge of DuMont's national sports coverage. Chosen All-American end in 1917, Arries was a three-letter man at Northwestern.

JAMES C. PETRILLO has made television unhappy for some time by refusing to permit American Federation of Musician members to participate in telecasts, but he gladdened the hearts of television people last week when he testified before the House Labor Committee, which is looking askance at his activities.

He not only sounded optimistic about making a suitable deal with the networks soon, but turned out to be wondrously telegenic.

Burke Crotty, director of WMAL-TV which picked up the hearings and fed them to eight other stations, says "Petrillo is dynamic and projects well. Like John L. Lewis and the late Fiorello LaGuardia, he makes good television." The usual trouble with telecasting hearings is that the witnesses and Congressmen sit in calm dignity and don't move anything but their lips.

The committee of television men who have been making monthly estimates of the number of sets in use in the District expect quite a jump in February over the January 1 figure of 6600. Sets purchased for Christmas had not been installed by the first of the year but will be in use by February 1.

Jim Seiler, assistant to the manager at WRC and WNBW, who is chairman of the committee, says that of the 6600 sets about 500 have been constructed at home—mostly by engineers trying to save a penny. The Electrical Institute, which supplies figures for the monthly estimate, indicates that in the fall months of this year sets were sold in Washington at the average rate of 1000 a month.

MILTON Q. FORD is opening his morning show to talented high school youngsters. Auditions will be conducted daily—at a different school each day. The winners will appear on Ford's show over WWDC and WWDC-FM some time between 8 and 8:30 a. m.

Man bites dog. A radio man dragged a neighbor into court because she played her radio. He complained that it was too loud and too long. The judge agreed. Backed into a corner, the radio man refused to say whether it was his station to which the woman was tuned all the time.

Radio Women To Meet Here

Some of the most extensive television coverage ever offered to a convention will be given to little gathering of approximately 200 delegates meeting here next weekend.

Small wonder, however. Members of the Association of Women Broadcasters, NAB, who will be having their annual convention, are reputedly very attractive and well-dressed.

Many of them, including Ruth Crane of WMAL, who is president of the association, and Nancy Osgood of WRC, chairman of the local group, have had television experience.

Friday night at 9, WMAL-TV will telecast an audience participation show with members of AWB, and Saturday at 1 p. m. WNBW will telecast the luncheon meeting at which Secretary Clinton Anderson will speak.

Dosh Puts Over a Fast One

LIKE THE man said, roses by any other name don't always smell.

Several months ago Joe Dosh, WINX platter jockey and popular recording artist, appeared on the Paul Whiteman "On Stage America" program under the name Joe Grayson.

Most performers participate in that show to get a national showcase for their talent and maybe impress scouts for the recording companies who are rumored to listen to it faithfully.

But Dosh, already under contract to a recording company and a one time "Lucky Strike Hit Parade" singer, was just doing it for a lark. He was curious to see if some recording company would like him as well when he sang without benefit of buildup.

One did. So well that Dosh couldn't resist the offer made him. Being trained as a legal eagle (Columbus Law School and FBI) Joe soon found a loophole in his contract with the first company and began making records like mad for the second company, before the Petrillo ban on recordings closed in.

Now he has a stockpile ready, one of them being his own composition, "(Hi There) Have You Been Away?" which was named by a listener. But the hitch is, he may not be able to wriggle out of his earlier contract scot free, and recordings made for his new employer may have to be released with "vocals by Joe Grayson."

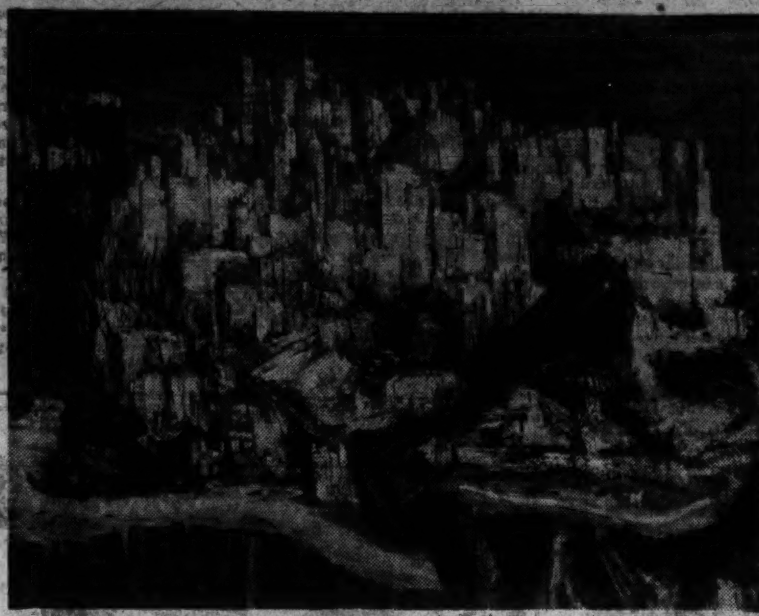
It's Good and Big

Corcoran Has Rich Mixture



"The City," by Martin Jackson of Philadelphia, winner of $1500 fellowship award. Currently on display at the Corcoran Gallery

By Jane Watson Crane

SPEAKING of art in his "Study of History," Toynbee remarks that the fatuousness of the "chocolate-box style" has led to desperate remedies. He cites particularly a flight to the Byzantine.

The Pepsi-Cola sponsored, jury-selected show of American "Paintings of the Year," now at the Corcoran, happens to illustrate both tendencies. Witness two paintings, one singled out for purchase, the other for an award, namely Hobson Pittman's "Peonies and Roses" and Nahum Tschacbasov's "The Bride." The show is full of similar juxtapositions, but in justice it must be said that traces of the "chocolate-box" are few and far between.

Although big business firms are accustomed to spending large sums on advertising, the fact that Pepsi-Cola earmarked $35,950 for cash prizes, awards and fellowships seems magnificent to most artists.

This is the fourth year that the company has held a show of the kind, which it circulates to various parts of the country. Accompanying it is a handsomely illustrated catalogue. In addition there is a widely circulated calendar with color reproductions of selected paintings for each month of the year.

'Large' Appeal

THIS year the show was picked by four regional artist-juries, each of which had an enormous amount of territory to cover; by a national jury of final selection, and a special jury of awards.

The result, as might be expected, is a group to appeal to a variety of tastes. Impressively large for a traveling show, it is in some respects stimulating, in others, depressing.

The title is too ambiguous to challenge, but attendant publicity rashly claims these as "the best paintings of the year." Without detracting from the good that is present, almost anyone can name without difficulty several topflight United States painters who are not even represented. In a country this size, with talent so widely scattered, it is doubtful whether any jury system could guarantee to skim the cream in a given year.

Evidence of the tendency toward decentralization is in fact one of the encouraging aspects here. The Pacific Northwest, for example, emerges with several good and original paintings. But, to cite one of the inconsistencies of the show, two outstanding painters of the region—Mark Tobey and Morris Graves—do not appear at all.

Color Triumphant

IN AN effort to summarize the confused field of contemporary art, two generalities are current—one, the emphasis on "expressionism," the other, on color. Color does triumph here, although sometimes at sacrifice to other elements. Expressionism is a term loosely used to cover almost anything which does not fit conveniently into another category. Under this heading may be included some original and exciting work, but some of what passes for self-expression is more like the echo of an original idea by someone else. There are fewer little Picassos and Cezannes, but what about the Rouaults, the Max Beckmanns and the Chagall, winner of an award of $1000?

As a result, the simpler paintings, where the artist has stuck resolutely to his own last, stand out in welcome relief. That is why, we believe, that the clear spacious painting of Nicolai Cikovsky was hailed as one of the best in the show from the day it opened in New York this fall. The dry-uncompromising realism of Holtan Sepeshy's "The Whole Town" has its obvious limitations. But it is consistent and right for what it is, whereas one questions the judgment of a painter who portrays a Southern mountaineer woman in the manner of the latter-day Europeans.

First prize winner in the 1948 contest is an imaginative painting that conveys the stark ugliness and incongruity of a tenement in the country. Throughout, themes of slums and the drabness of an industrial environment appear side by side with the romantic and subjective. Aside from these contrasts, there are differences in point of view and approach which will make one visitor consider the group too progressive for his taste, another, too conservative.

Fellowships Given

FELLOWSHIP awards, a most valuable feature of the Pepsi-Cola program, went to Roger Holt, Martin Jackson, Fred Mitchell and Richard Prasch. Mitchell's skillful painting is akin to the work of Robert Gwathmey (not represented). Jackson's "The City" and Holt's "November Evening" hold more than promise.

Next Friday at 12:30 p. m. Willis Woods assistant to the director of the Corcoran, will give a gallery talk on "Paintings of the Year." Subsequent talks in February will be given by Amy Briggs and George Hamilton. The show will continue on view to February 22.

In addition, the Corcoran has several new features to offer. Its own collections of American art have been reinstalled and a new catalogue issued. Barye's famous bronzes are shown in a special gallery downstairs. Some of the European paintings and sculptures have been reinstalled. There are also continuing shows of water colors and prints by contemporary artists.

Few Collectors Protest Ban on Postcard Notice

By William M. Stuart

THE POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT has received few complaints concerning a recently announced order that no advance postcard notices of new stamps would be forthcoming hereafter. For many years collectors have been informed by postcard of the issue of a new stamp, the number on January 1, 1948, being nearly 80,000. The practice has been discontinued because of lack of clerical help, but the department believes those interested will experience little difficulty in obtaining information about new issues, since such information is published in many places. As a matter of fact, more publicity is given today regarding the issuance of new stamps than ever before and it is doubtful whether any collector will miss a first day.

In the early days of stamp collecting the postcard announcement played its part, but with increased methods of publicity, officials believe there is no longer need for such announcements. However, one of the largest national philatelic organizations takes the position that collectors are being neglected; therefore, its large membership is invited to file protests with the department against the order.

A TOTAL of 402,179 covers of the 3-cent commemorative Dr. George Washington Carver were canceled at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, on January 5 and 780,000 stamps sold.

Representative Robert J. Twyman of Illinois has introduced a bill in the House authorizing a 5-cent commemorative stamp for the 100th anniversary of the first settlement of the Swedish pioneers in the Middle West.

Alexandria, Va., observes its 200th anniversary in 1949 and has taken steps to prepare for an elaborate celebration. Among the matters discussed is a special anniversary postage stamp and the Postoffice Department will be requested to issue one. However, the policy of the department has been not to issue stamps for anniversaries of cities or towns.

The 3-cent commemorative stamp pictured in this space January 11 and honoring the 100th anniversary of the discovery of gold in California was placed on sale yesterday at Coloma, Calif. The stamp is purple, 0.84x1.44 inches in dimensions, arranged horizontally, and the identical size of the current special delivery stamp. It was printed by rotary press, electric eye perforations and issued in sheets of 50.

The Capital Precancel Club meets tomorrow at the Weeks Stamp Shop, 1229 New York ave. nw., at 8 p. m. Joseph H. Spiegelberg of the Aero-Philatelic Exchange, 805 G st. nw., will be at his office the coming week after an absence of a week owing to the death of his father.

The Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, an auction sale of 75 lots being held. Ernest Woodhouse acted as auctioneer. Dr. G. G. Frazier exhibited several frames of Confederate stamps and covers. At the meeting Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw., there will be a speaker and C. H. Vaughan will exhibit his collection of King Edward VII issues of Great Britain. All collectors are invited.

DEAN Stambaugh, art teacher at St. Albans School, is the only artist from the District of Columbia represented in the Pepsi-Cola "Paintings of the Year" exhibition now at the Corcoran. Gould Displays Varied Styles In 'Showcase'

NEW YORK, Jan. 24 (U.P.)—Morton Gould and his orchestra play many different styles of tunes in a "Showcase" album for Columbia. His sparkling and original arrangements succeed in pleasing in music from the gypsy-like "Two Guitars" to popular "Bigin the Beguine" and straight blues of the "Blues in the Night" variety.

Capitol presents the King Cole Trio in the third volume of a series. The extemporaneous arrangements of this unique small combination are particularly effective on "Too Marvelous for Words," "Honeysuckle Rose" and "This Is My Night to Dream."

Peter Lawford, June Allyson, Joan McCracken and Patricia Marshall sing the hit tunes of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new musical hit in a peppy "Good News" album.

Six salty sea chanteys and whaling ballads are gathered in a Decca album, "Deep Sea Chanteys." Pete Seeger, Woody Guthrie, Peter Hawes and Millard Lampell sing the vigorous old songs.

NEW Singles:

Billie Holiday's torch singing would be hard to beat on "Gloomy Sunday" and "Night and Day" (Columbia) . . . Phil Brito sings two widely different tunes on one record with a Western ballad, "An Old Sombrero," and the novelty standard, "Where Do You Work-a John" (Musicraft).

Victor's Perry Como rhythmically sings "I've Got a Feeling I'm Falling" coupled with "Pianissimo" . . . Kenny Gardner vocalizes with Guy Lombardo's Orchestra with the fast climbing hit, "They're Mine, They're Mine, They're Mine" (Decca).

England's fastest selling platter, "Now Is the Hour," sung by Gracie Fields, has been issued here by London Records—a pleasing, slow number with an old-fashioned flavor.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer introduces a new singer, Jackie Paris, with some pretty good jazz vocals on "Your Red Wagon" and "Skylark" . . . Johnny Guarnieri's hard pounding piano has never been better than on "Sorry I Lost My Head" and "Bobo the Bowery Barber" (Majestic).

A delightful foreign-accent novelty with Latin American background is sung by Peggy Lee—"Manana (is soon enough for me)" (Capitol) . . . Dennis Day is liltingly romantic on the ballads "Peggy O'Neil" and "Mickey" (Victor).

Steppat Appointed Art Lecturer at A. U.

Dr. Paul Douglass, president of American University, has announced the appointment of Leo Steppat, well known sculptor, as lecturer in art. Steppat will teach sculpture two nights a week beginning the art department's second semester, opening February 6. Steppat, Austrian-born and an American citizen since 1945, has been a resident of Washington since 1940. Graduate of the Academy of Fine Arts in Vienna, he has exhibited and taught in this country, where he is represented in several collections.

Here's a Tip on How to Win the Pepsi-Cola Contest

One of my colleagues (who thinks newspapermen should remain anonymous) is forever coming into the office with new stories about his daughters.

For example, Peggy Lou, who is 11, was recently working hard on a school paper dealing with coal. Papa noticed that she was writing with her right hand, and marking her place in an encyclopedia with her left.

"Young lady," he called, "you aren't copying that material right out of the encyclopedia, are you?"

"No, dad," she replied, "I'm confusing the sentences—and also myself."

Elizabeth, who is 16, furnishes us with a more sophisticated story. The family was discussing the Pepsi-Cola contest the other night, when Liz piped up with:

"I could tell them how to sell more Pepsi-Cola, but I wouldn't win any prizes. I could tell them in two words."

"What two words?" asked Pop wearily.

"Add rum."

CHECK?

I like to see my name in print;
It makes me gay, by heck!
My face shines like the U. S. Mint,

Jerry Boin

Incidentally, Copy Boy Boin was passing through the Sports Department the other day, when Herb Heft spotted him. Herb called out, "Hello, Poe."

Recognizing the reference to his rhyming efforts, Jerry replied with mock solemnity:

"Not Poe, Mr. Heft. I'm trying to become another Ogden Nash."

"Come now," replied Heft with alacrity. "Please don't make a Nash of yourself."

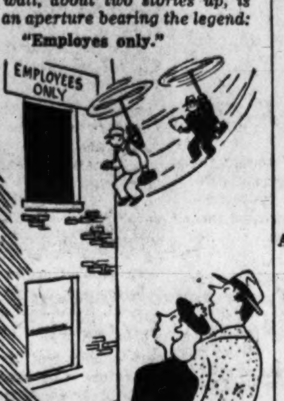
MYSTERY

John and Dorothy McGee of 25-D Ridge rd., Greenbelt, Md., suspects that there's a firm in Washington which employs nothing but human flies.

The McGees say that on the northeast corner of 25th and F sts. nw. there's a tall brick building set back from an open lot.

Right smack in the brick wall, about two stories up, is an aperture bearing the legend:

"Employes only."



There is no stairway, and no other visible connection between the opening and the ground.

The McGees amuse themselves by inventing explanations for this strange setup—and wonder whether anybody can supply the real answer.

UNOBJECTIONABLE CRANKS

A few days ago I made the mistake of saying that the hurdy-gurdy "had gone out with buggy whips and hand-crank telephones."

Mary Elizabeth Kempton of RFD Brentsville, Bristow, Va., writes:

"Out here in the country we're not allowed to have any except hand-crank telephones. We have one, and it works very well.

"The weather down here has been so frightful that I thought I'd inform you of that fact, just to add a little interest to the day."

Good; glad to hear from you. If that telephone is still working, crank up the weatherman and tell him to make up his mind one way or the other.

ADD NAMES

James C. Wilfong, jr., of 1341 Montana ave. ne., turns up one of the strangest name items we've carried.

Down in Virginia you'll find the Bull Pasture River, the Cow Pasture River, and the Calf Pasture River.

Jim says that he's under the impression that the Bull Pasture and the Cow Pasture converge and become the Calf Pasture—but our librarians say their maps don't substantiate that point.

Can anybody help us out? I'd hate to leave such a wonderful coincidence in doubt.

In a Little Negro School

Teacher Calls Job 'Ideal'

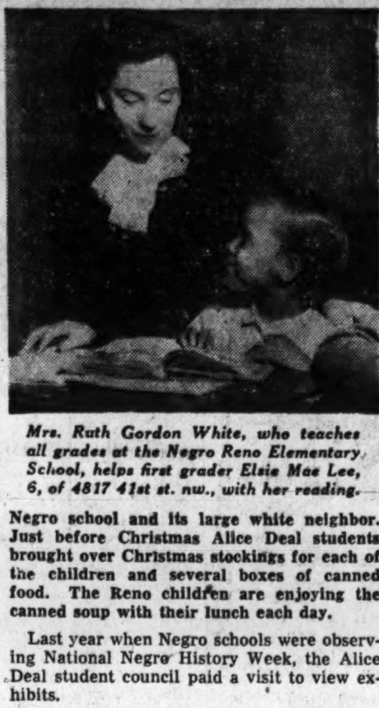
By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

IN THE neighborhood of the white Woodrow Wilson High and Alice Deal Junior High Schools is a small group of Negro homes, the remnant of a once large Negro residential area.

Twelve children, ages 6 to 12, from these homes attend the Reno Elementary School, a four-room, gray stucco building adjoining the Alice Deal at Fort drive and Nebraska ave. nw.

The schoolhouse has one teacher, Mrs. Ruth Gordon White, who teaches all grades in one room.

In winter, she closes off three rooms to conserve heat, but during the other seasons her children use one room for an assembly hall, another for lunchroom and the third for a playroom. The large basement is an industrial arts room.



Mrs. Ruth Gordon White, who teaches all grades at the Negro Reno Elementary School, helps first grader Elsie Mae Lee, 6, of 4817 41st st. nw., with her reading.

She Likes It

MRS. WHITE, a teacher since her graduation from college in 1944, finds the teaching situation at Reno "ideal." Before her transfer to the school last April she taught 42 students in one class at the Briggs-Montgomery Elementary School.

In her present class are two first grade students, four third-grade students, two fourth grades, one fifth grader and three in the sixth grade.

Because the group is small, Mrs. White has been able to abolish teaching by grade levels. One of her third grade students with a special aptitude for words is now reading with the fourth grade students but taking arithmetic with the third graders.

"Our school does everything a large school does only on a small scale," Mrs. White said.

She rings the bell every morning and at dismissal time and holds regular fire drills. The children march from class two by two. The school has a Parent-Teacher Association and gives occasional school plays.

Principal Also

MRS. WHITE, who serves as principal of the school as well as teacher, has all the duties of the country one-room schoolhouse teacher with the exception of firing the furnace and sweeping the floor. She has the assistance of one full-time and one part-time engineer-custodian for that.

Friendly relations exist between the small Negro school and its large white neighbor. Just before Christmas Alice Deal students brought over Christmas stockings for each of the children and several boxes of canned food. The Reno children are enjoying the canned soup with their lunch each day.

Last year when Negro schools were observing National Negro History Week, the Alice Deal student council paid a visit to view exhibits.

Built in 1903

THE 12 students come from eight famliies living in the predominantly white and wealthy community. The Negro homes are fast disappearing and school officials expect to close down the school when the Fort Drive development takes in the houses.

The Reno School built in 1903 was used to capacity until 1926 when enrollment was 146. The number of students has dropped steadily over the years as families moved away. Last year there were 20 students and at the beginning of this term 14.

When the school, which is older than the present building, was founded more than 60 years ago, it was in the suburbs of Washington. It served a group of Negro families which had gone to live in the vicinity of Fort Reno at the end of the Civil War.

At the Bridge Table

Maryland Meet Begins In Baltimore on Friday

By Marian H. Barre

BRIDGE PLAYERS have a date in Baltimore for the Maryland State Championships on January 30, 31, and February 1, at the Emerson Hotel. The tournament program follows:

January 30, 2 p. m., the women's pair Championship for the Llewellyn Lord Trophy, now held by Mrs. Marianne Boschan and Miss Kathleen McNutt, both of this city. A new event for men's pairs will be run concurrently. At 8 p. m., mixed pairs; defenders are the brother-sister duo, Ruth and Herbert Sherman, of New York.

January 31, 2 p. m., open pair qualifying session; finals 8 p. m. Eliminated players will compete in a special open section in the evening. Charles Shapiro, Baltimore, and Ambrose Casper, New York, now hold this ranking title.

February 1, 1 p. m., team-of-four championship in two sessions. 1947 winners were Charles H. Goren, Edward Cohn, Marie Basher, all of Philadelphia, and the Shermans.

The caliber of the competition is reflected by these defenders. Goren is top-ranking player in the country, Miss Sherman, Casner, and Cohn are life masters, the others are in the "senior" grade.

FOLLOWING Baltimore comes a new ACBL offering called the Virginia Peninsula Tournament, to be held on February 6, 7, 8, at the Chamberlin Hotel in Fort Monroe, Va. Dr. Arthur Salasky is chairman of the tournament committee, which includes members from Washington and Baltimore, from North Carolina, and from the tidewater section of the Old Dominion. Games director is Russel J. Baldwin, the Bridge League's ace. The program follows the usual schedule of women's, mixed, and open pairs, plus a Sunday match for teams.

City championships in Richmond on January 17 and 18 received scant advertising, nevertheless, two District foursomes were present at the team match. The local line-up of C. C. Johnson, William Million, and Joe White, teamed with Skinner, of Norfolk, finished in a tie for top with a Norfolk-Richmond team, playing Mrs. Landauer, Gerst, Salasky, and Caplan. There was another tie for second place, between our gang, which included Mrs. Frederick Eberson, Miller Roberts, J. G. Stone and Col. H. C. Vanderluis, and a Richmond quartet, the runner-up being just a half-board off top.

Tuesday is open pair night at the Federal Bridge League when nonmembers may compete for master-point awards. The game starts promptly at 8 p. m. in Pierce Hall, Paul E. Golden will direct.

Ely Culbertson's scheduled convention for teachers has been called off. Reason alleged ". . . that work is progressing on revised contract bridge laws . . . until they are completed we must not decide on any changes in the Culbertson System. The laws of the game are likely to affect the strategy of bidding and play."

Meanwhile, most certified teachers are followers of Goren, with a sprinkling of "Four Acers," plus rising competition from the Charles Solomon point-count. But the Roth-Newman-Stone (Tobias) school is not extinct, and Churchillites still "paint pictures" by their bidding.

A FIRST-TIME winner copped a master-point at Euclid Studio's nationally awarded monthly on January 17. He was F. P. Dormandy, who paired with his wife and won the north-south top in an expert field, defeating the veteran team of Johnson and Million by 4½ points. Winners in the other position were David Murray and Joe White, with a record lead of 2½ points over Bob Jordan and Mr. Peterson.

Results of the Studio's first annual open pair championships were too late for this column. Played through two sessions, leaders in the first half were Mrs. Eberson and Milton Bierbaum, who were 1 point up on White White and Jordan, third place going to Harold Mayer and James Lazard. Pinch-hitting for J. G. Stone, who was ill, Bierbaum spent three days in this city, playing in three separate games with three different partners, winning each time. He is president of the St. Louis Bridge League and a friend of Ralph Webber, former District expert now stationed there.

The mystic number "3" figures in David Murray's record also, as his win was the third consecutive victory in master point games at Euclid Studios.

Postponed from the usual "second Saturday," the Capital City Chess Club's duplicate monthly was held on January 18, national awards going to Dr. J. W. Waits and George Dickerman and to Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Shepherd, their understudies being Dr. A. F. O'Donnell and Joe White, J. G. Fletcher and Bill Million.

Man Who Refused 2 Million For Discovery Is Honored

Dr. Arno B. Luckhardt, professor of physiology, University of Chicago, who a quarter of a century ago discovered the anesthetic properties of ethylene when investigating why a florist's carnations turned yellow, and refused two million dollars for his discovery, preferring to make it freely available to the medical profession, has been made distinguished service professor of the university.

The Old 'Know How'

Atoms or Oboes—It's All One at Penn State

By Bob Considine

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Jan. 24 (INS).—The wonderful workings of the American mind are brought home vividly by a trip to a vigorous American college such as Penn State.

Some of the most vital chemical work on the atomic bomb and the mass production of penicillin was achieved by quiet, pipe-smoking men of learning at this college.

Yet the same place which was able to reach successfully into the shrouded mysteries of nuclear fission, and then extract a healing something from the golden sewage of a penicillin jar, can also teach its students how to play an oboe, milk a cow, tie and cast a bright-hued fishing fly.

They have here, too, the first man in history to understand what enables a homing pigeon to find its way home.

They also have a man who has created a siren that gives off a sound that can be seen but not heard, a sound that can wash clothes, kill mice, heat coffee, light cigarettes, pop corn and age whisky.

Penn State, in addition, had a great and unbeaten football team which tied Southern Methodist on New Year's Day in the Cotton Bowl.

And among its often remarkable alumni is the perennially zestful Fred Waring, who, in addition to his radio show each morning and his big show each Monday night, heads a choral-arrangements publishing house that did a million-dollar business last year.

Waring also operates a vast resort hotel at Shawnee-on-Delaware; heads the firm which manufactures 200,000 Waring "mixers" each year—and plays golf every day.

Macabre Uses

PENN STATE'S inaudible-sound man is Dr. H. K. Schilling, director of its acoustics lab. He developed his odd siren while working for the Army Signal Corps during the war.

Each day finds some new constructive or macabre use for the gadget. It can kill a laboratory mouse in a minute; mosquitos and such in a few seconds.

It seems able, too, to sterilize food, homogenize milk, increase the fertility of seeds, perhaps speed up the healing of human wounds.

Penn State takes angling seriously because it believes, with considerable justification, that few collegians can ever take home a sport after graduation.

The former gridman, for instance, once he is in the bond-selling business, finds it difficult to gather 21 other men when he wants a bit of sport. So Prof. George Harvey has installed a formal class in the school of physical education entitled "principles and techniques of angling."

Prefers Pigeons

THE PROFESSOR of pigeoneering is Henry L. Yeagley, a physicist who has wisely preferred pigeons to people for many years. Professor Yeagley has found that vision has nothing to do with homing, for his pigeons can come home—and do—blindfolded. Their hearing can be locked off, too, and they come home.

But then he found that a pigeon with a magnetized bit of metal tied to one wing became lost.

Where is the magnet in the bird itself? Yeagley believes it is in muscles that extend inward just behind the eyes of pigeons, which will come as no surprise to any chorus-line cutie.

Pennsylvania College Plans Alumnae Center

Chambersburg, Pa., Jan. 24.—Construction of a student-alumnae center will begin at Wilson College as soon as architectural plans are carried out.

The project, for which Wilson graduates and former students have set up a fund of $250,000, will be headquarters for the alumnae association and for undergraduate social and extra-curricular activities.

India Sets Up Educational Center

New Delhi, Jan. 24 (AP).—The government of India is putting into operation a scheme for starting a central institute of education, to function as a training center for teachers and to conduct extensive research in education.

The institute will provide for 150 men and 150 women. An appropriation of 2,245,000 rupees ($700,000) has been made toward expenses.

The Itch to Learn Is Just an Itch

Bydgoszcz, Poland, Jan. 24 (AP).—School children in the Pomorze district are doing a lot of scratching. A health report showed 19,000 out of 83,000 had lice.

Another 14,000 are suffering scabies. Nine per cent of all the children have tuberculosis.

Univ. of Virginia Trains Men For Responsibility

By William G. Avirett

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Jan. 24.—Current opinion among the high command of the University of Virginia was summed up in one sentence recently by Colgate W. Darden, jr., class of 1922, who was inaugurated last October as president of the university. "This place has a fabulous future," he said.

Leaning forward across the desk in the office on East Lawn, the genial former Governor of Virginia added emphatically: "You have no idea of the power latent in this university. Nor is there any limit to our opportunity to train men for responsible citizenship."

Near by, in the famous Jeffersonian Rotunda, Fleet Admiral William F. Hasley (retired), class of 1900, had set up his headquarters at the time. Looking up from a littered desk, he said: "The only way you can make this crazy world sane is by education. If you want to take out insurance for peace, you can do it at universities like this. Particularly and especially at this university."

Assignment Scares Halsey

ADMIRAL HALSEY, wearing a brown-and-white tweed coat without benefit of gold braid, heads a task force preparing to raise $7,800,000 through gifts for an eight-point development program. "And I don't mind telling you that this assignment has me scared," says the man who led the Third Fleet to the shores of Japan.

His objectives include more than two million for expansion of the medical school and hospital and one million or more each for the Woodrow Wilson School of Foreign Affairs and for improvements in the law school. An alumni hall, as a war memorial, and a new academic building, to centralize instruction in arts and sciences, are planned.

The establishment of a school of commerce and business, the first in the South, is another objective. Provision for supplementary faculty salaries and for the university press is a part of the admiral's mission.

Beams Indorses View

THE PROGRAM is indorsed by Prof. Jesse W. Beams, whose research in physics for the Federal Government still continues behind barbed wire. After seven years of silence imposed for security reasons, Dr. Beams had lost the habit of conversation.

Although the accomplishment of these objectives will benefit the State and the South, there was no thought of sectionalism in Dr. Darden's mind. "The university is a national institution," he said, "and I would regard it as a castastrophe if we ever barred competent students from outside, owing to some notion that we should serve primarily the State of Virginia or the South."

"In fact, the greatest service to Virginians is to bring them in contact with first-class minds from all over the country," he continued. "That works both ways, of course.

"After all, good citizenship in Minnesota and in Carolina means essentially the same thing and calls for the same training. What we need desperately are general thinkers—and a great many of them. You have to have them in Government. I spent quite some time in politics and I know."

Enlarges on Theme

ON ANOTHER occasion he enlarged on this topic. "For years this country drifted without a positive foreign policy supported by informed public opinion," he said. "Just how close we came to disaster we will never know. There is urgent need today for trained leadership and to that need this university is trying to make a contribution."

Thus far the contribution of the foreign affairs school, now in its third year, has been greater in terms of general undergraduate interest than in turning out specialists for the foreign service or international trade, according to Dr. Oron J. Hale, acting chairman of the school.

"I think the future of the school lies in the senior year and graduate training," he said. "But right now we have 300 students enrolled in foreign affairs classes, of whom 100 are majoring in the field. Wherever they may land, professionally or in business, this background should make them more intelligent citizens of the world's leading power today. And we will not be the leading power long unless we have more education for world responsibilities."

Race and Religion Rise As Educational Issues

"OVER the United States there is increasing evidence of the rising prominence of religious and racial issues in the educational world," states The Key Reporter, the Phi Beta Kappa News Magazine, in its winter issue. The journal lists "spot reports" on happenings as they appeared in a cross-section of the national press.

Before the U. S. Supreme Court is the case of Paul Connell, a Pennsylvania parent who trying to compel the local school board to furnish transportation out of public funds for his daughter. The child is attending a parochial school, and the school board maintains that the use of taxpayers' money in that case would violate the Pennsylvania constitutional provision that "no money raised for the support of the public schools shall be used for support for any sectarian school." Pennsylvania's Supreme Court upheld the school board.

A group of 60 Protestant leaders, headed by G. Bromley Oxnam, bishop of the New York area of the Methodist Church, plans to organize nationally "to insure the separation of church and State," The Key Reporter says.

The Catholic Parent Association in St. Louis, formed to oppose admission of Negro pupils to white Catholic parochial schools, has been disbanded. The group, it is stated, took this action when Archbishop Joseph E. Ritter threatened excommunication of those planning court action to uphold segregation.

Growing More Serious

BRUCE BLIVEN is quoted as saying in a recent article in The New Republic that anti-semitism is "a powerful force in the United States today and one which is daily growing more serious." Two surveys indicate that it is on the upgrade in professional and graduate schools. The Commission on Law and Social Action of the American Jewish Congress says that "findings of an enrollment study of the five approved medical schools in New York City show that both the number and proportion of Jewish students have been systematically reduced . . ."

Unfavorably cited are: The Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, Cornell Medical College, Long Island College of Medicine, and New York Medical College. Only the New York University College of Medicine has been shown not to be participating in this aspect of the discriminatory gentlemen's agreement.

In Gary, Ind., white students went on strike against attending school with Negro students. The school board threatened legal action against strikers' parents, invoking a new Indiana antihate law, and against the pupils under existing truancy regulations.

Some Achievements

JAMES H. TIPTON discussed the Gary case in a recent issue of Intercultural Education News. While there certainly can be no reason to excuse the hateful incident, there were many indications of over-all achievements in the long and bitter fight for better race relations. It was particularly important that in Gary the school board, the teachers, the mayor, the police and the local press took up the fight against segregation so forcefully and with so great a conviction that the strike collapsed. While the issue is not yet finally settled, it was demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt that the forces of bigotry can be successfully opposed and eventually defeated by legal means.

Perhaps even more significant in the attempt to show the ignorance of discrimination is Mr. Tipton's story of a Gary incident which did not make the headlines. A white youngster came to the principal and said: "I won't be at school tomorrow. I'll not go to school with Negroes." The principal replied sternly: "Why, Jimmie, don't you live in the same building with three Negro families? Aren't they friends of yours?" Seriously the youngster answered: "Oh, yes. But that's different."

Just at that point a little colored boy appeared and called: "Aren't you ready to go home, Jimmie?" And without hesitation: "In just a minute, Eddie. Wait for me downstairs. I've got to finish talking to the principal."

A few minutes later the two boys were walking home together, great friends.

The Record Player

Petina's Voice Lovely But Elusive

TSCHAIKOWSKY: Songs. Irra Petina, soprano, with orchestra. Columbia 712. $4.60. Petina is credited with making Song of Norway the hit it was on Broadway. And well she may have, for she has a beautiful voice, and according to those who saw her in the show, is a fine actress. Here she sings some of the least heard songs of Tschaikowsky, including only two that are frequently sung. Born in Russia, she uses the language expressively, and with native simplicity.

And yet through all of these songs there runs a thread of something elusive but which keeps them from moving you to any more than politeness. It seems to be a rather too casual approach and that is precisely the kind of thing which befalls many fine artists when they descend in the scale of entertainment values.

There is much of beauty here, but for the genuine sound of most of these, look for the older Victor set by Maria Kurenko.

SCHUBERT: Adagio in G Minor; also: Three Minuets. Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, with Ralph Berkowitz, pianist. Columbia 72373. $1.25. What a dull record! Why doesn't Columbia have Piatigorsky play some of the great literature for 'cello and stop fussing around with all these transcriptions which only sound tired and lifeless?

IRRA PETINA
. . . a beautiful voice

Respighi: Roman Festivals. Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor. Columbia 707. $4.60. For orchestral tone this set stands with Ormandy's Pines of Rome, by the same composer, which came out about a year ago. But musically it is even less interesting than the Pines, and that's pretty uninteresting. Mostly bombast, it repeats what the composer did better in his Pines and Fountains. Excellent recording technically.

Gould: Interplay. Robin Hood Dell Orchestra, Morton Gould, pianist and conductor. Columbia 289. $3.35. One of the better jazzy ballet scores, with choreography by Jerry Robbins, Interplay pleased Washington audiences last fall when Ballet Theater was here. Now its familiar breaks and turns are set down for a querulous posterity. They may not dream up precisely the stage pictures that Robbins evolved, but they get a good accounting of Gould's intentions, for the composer triples as conductor and pianist. It's a fine recording and I think the music is a lot of fun.

Prokofieff: Classical Symphony. Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor. Columbia 287. $3.25. Ormandy is a little slow and a little heavy for this, one of the most scintillant of scores. If I were you I'd wait on the chance that Victor is about to release a new recording of it by the BSO-Koussevitsky combine.

If you can't wait, this sounds fine, and in some ways is not too bad.

Professor Urges More Guidance For College Men

Easton, Pa., Jan. 24.—Asserting that there are more real career opportunities for college graduates than there are men qualified to fill them, Prof. Fred W. Slantz, director of the placement bureau at Lafayette College, advocates a guidance program starting with the freshman year to prepare students for their life work.

In his annual report on the work of the bureau, Professor Slantz points out that the guidance of students after they have reached the senior year is "too little and too late," and that men miss opportunities which they want but for which they have not qualified themselves.

Record at St. Michael's

Winooski Park, Va., Jan. 24.—St. Michael's College will admit this year a record number of students transferring from other colleges. Thomas A. Garrett, registrar, said that St. Michael's will register 25 transfer students in February for the second semester and 100 more in the fall.

RECORDED MUSIC
Any "permanent" needle, whether diamond, sapphire or metal, keeps its original shape for only a limited number of plays—then it progressively erodes the record grooves. So, it's important to be able to change needles at will at home.
